Red Attack Could Occur, Group Told By Acheson

But Gangsters Bet Only on Sure Thing, Congress Informed In Arms-Aid Appeal

By Murrey Marder
Post Reporter

Secretary of State Acheson yesterday told Congress it cannot ignore the possibility that Russia will use direct force to reach goals of conquest it has failed to attain by "pressure."

Launching the congressional drive for the Administration's $1,450,000,000 arms-aid plan as the first witness before the House Foreign Affairs Committee, Acheson declared:

"When political aggression fails, as it has failed so far in western Europe, totalitarian regimes are often tempted to gain their objectives by military means, particularly when they consider that no effective resistance is possible."

'Likes Sure Things'

He said "the possibilities of direct military aggression" cannot "be ignored" in western Europe now, as the free nations there "are incapable today of defending themselves against a major armed attack."

However, he said, "the gangster mind likes to gamble only on sure things."

"I do not believe that in the light of the pledge of the (North Atlantic) treaty, and with the military program now proposed, any aggressor at this time would dare" to "take the desperate gamble of an all-out war."

In a strong plea for what he termed the proposed "minimum" program, Acheson attempted to reply to many of the objections and fears it has precipitated.

"Fears that the Military Assistance Program might set off an international armament race or provoke the Soviet Union to war, in my considered opinion, are groundless."

Reds "Are Well Aware"

Russia, he said, "is well aware that those forces are for defense purposes only and cannot possibly menace the Soviet Union."

Rather than being in conflict with the defense council to be established under the treaty, he said, the arms program will help supply an "existing force" basic to any strategy.

An accounting for "every bullet, every piece of radar equipment, every item of every sort" will be given to the committee in closed session, he said.

There is no intention of sending American "forces" abroad, he said: there will be only missions of technical and training experts.

While some critics state that Western Europe's security is more a political than military issue, ". . . I am convinced that failure to reinforce the determination of free nations to defend themselves against subversion from within and aggression from without may

Peace Efforts Fail to Halt Strike Of Midinettes

Paris, July 28 (AP).—Government intervention failed tonight to end a strike of needle workers that threatens to leave Paris' flashy dressmaking industry without any fall models to show.

The industry is on the eve of its most important showing of the year, with millions of American dollars hanging in the balance.

The city's thousands of midinettes demanded more money. They insisted they could no longer carry on with wages running around $12 a week for skilled workers and $1.50 a week for apprentices.

Supreme Tribunal Choice Is Surprise; President Guesses Both Will Accept

By Edward T. Folliard
Post Reporter

President Truman yesterday offered Tom Clark a place on the bench of the United States Supreme Court and asked Senator J. Howard McGrath of Rhode Island to succeed Clark as Attorney General.

Mr. Truman told reporters at a White House news conference that both men were surprised, so much so that they asked for a few days to give their answers.

He said that his best guess was that both would accept.

The vacancy in the Supreme Court was created by the recent death of Associate Justice Frank Murphy, the fifth Catholic to sit on the high tribunal.

If Clark succeeds Murphy, it will be the first time in 55 years that the Supreme Court has lacked a Catholic member.

A reporter asked Mr. Truman yesterday if he felt that there should be a member of a major

Stop-Gap Bill For U. S. Funds Strikes Snag

Agency Cash May Run Out Monday; Foreign Aid Measure Held Up

By Robert C. Albright
Post Reporter

An emergency money bill, to keep ECA and other big Federal agencies in funds until the Senate snaps out of a serious log-jam, started through Congress yesterday.

A House-Senate snarl, however, slowed down final passage and threatened to leave many Government bureaus temporarily without cash.

A day of leadership conferences and committee huddles, meanwhile, failed to break the stalemate on the Senate-side-tracked foreign aid bill.

The $5,573,724,000 foreign aid measure, dumped back in the lap of the Senate Appropriations Committee Wednesday on a parliamentary technicality, was still locked tight there.

The leadership talks will resume today and the committee has tentatively called a meeting for 2 p. m. to try to untangle the snarl.

The stop-gap money measure, designed to keep scores of Government agencies in funds when a previous emergency measure expires Sunday night, was sped through the House without opposition.

The bill extends from July 31 to August 31 the period in which Government bureaus can draw in advance on unpassed 1950 appropriations.

Cuts Back Extension Period

The Senate last night approved the same resolution in three minutes, but adopted an amendment cutting back the extension period until August 15.

This means the amended bill will have to be resubmitted to the House. The House meanwhile recessed until Monday, presenting a new poser. With existing emergency money expiring Sunday night, most agencies are sure to be without a drawing account when business opens Monday.

Congressional leaders said the temporary money shortage won't be as serious as it sounds. Although bureaus affected can't technically obligate any funds until the authority comes through, actually most of them can operate much as usual until pay days roll around. By that time, say the leaders, they will have the cash.

The so-called "continuing" resolution launched yesterday permits agencies to operate at the lowest figure set by either House. If only one House has acted, then its figures would control. In no event, however, could affected

Senate Passes Final Draft On Unification

By John G. Norris
Post Reporter

The Senate yesterday passed the final draft of legislation to further unify the armed forces and cleared the way for "early action" on the military pay bill.

By voice vote, the upper house approved a conference report on the controversial unification measure adopted unanimously earlier in the day by a joint Senate-House Committee.

Chairman Carl Vinson (D., Ga.) of the House Armed Services Committee announced the House will act on the report Tuesday—assuring final passage by next weekend.

Senator Millard Tydings (D., Md.), chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, told reporters he now will ask the Senate leadership to bring up the pay boost bill "at an early date."

The Senate committee approved the pay measure earlier this month, but served notice it would not ask Senate consideration of it until passage of unification legislation was assured. Many members of the

Koreans Demand Purge of Officials Who Keep Harems

Seoul, Korea, July 28 (U.P.).—Three thousand angry women marched on the South Korea capitol today to demand the immediate "purge" of all government officials who keep "extra wives."

The general male reaction to the demonstration was expressed by a long-bearded Korean who stood on the curb watching the protest parade.

"There's getting to be too much democracy in this country," he said.

Judge Upholds Loyalty Tests For 2d Time

Miss Dorothy Bailey, former staff training supervisor with the United States Employment Service, yesterday lost a District Court battle to win reinstatement in her $8000-a-year job.

She had asked the court to declare she was improperly suspended and removed after a series of loyalty hearings in which she contended her constitutional rights were violated. She had asked also that the Federal Government be compelled to restore her to the job and give her back pay.

In dismissing her suit, Judge Alexander Holtzoff reiterated his decision of June 28 when he upheld the constitutionality of the President's loyalty program for Federal employes in a similar suit brought by 26 postal workers.

He ruled yesterday the court

Senators Quiz John Maragon In Probe of '5 Per Centers'

John Maragon, whose rise from shining shoes in Kansas City to the status of an intimate of prominent men has attracted notice at the Capitol, was a witness yesterday at a secret session of Senators investigating alleged "5 percenters."

He appeared before a Senate subcommittee looking into reports that persons claiming influence with officials have been seeking to get Government contracts for businessmen for a 5 per cent fee.

Reporters had difficulty pinning down the fact he had appeared at the secret session.

First, two high senatorial informants said he had been questioned. Then Maragon himself appeared outside the Senate chamber and told newsmen:

"I have not appeared before any committee today or any other time."

Still later Maragon dictated the following statement:

Coast Group In House for Home Rule

Poll Shows 24 Favor Principle, 5 Are Against, 4 Noncommittal

By Chalmers M. Roberts
Post Reporter

Four of the six freshman House members from the West Coast States favor District home rule and the other two are sympathetic to the basic principle.

Adding those House members who last year voted for or against home rule on the House floor, a poll of four who did not vote, and a check on another two who split their votes in 1948, the West Coast's 33 House members divide this way:

Against: ..... 5.
For: ..... 24.
Noncommittal: ..... 4.

A similar survey last week of New England's 28 House members showed 24 in favor of home rule, 3 against, and 1 noncommittal. All five freshman House members from New England favor it.

In House Committee

The Kefauver home rule bill already has passed the Senate but currently is in a House District Committee subcommittee where hearings have been going on sporadically for weeks. A "final" hearing is scheduled for 10 a. m. today.

Here are the comments of the six new West Coast members, as given to The Washington Post:

Hugh B. Mitchell (D., Wash.), former member of the Senate:

"I'd be for it. People here ought to take more interest in their own government. I've never been able to see Congress as a board of aldermen for the District of Columbia."

Hubert B. Scudder (R., Calif.), former mayor of Sebastopol:

"I'm pretty sympathetic toward home rule in municipal government. I don't like your present government—it's in line for a lot of improvements. Slum conditions appear to be due to bad sanitary and police laws. Besides, there's no time in Congress for local matters. These should be dealt with by the people who live here in the city."

Makes No Commitment

Cecil F. White (R., Calif.):

"I'm sympathetic to home rule but wouldn't want to make a commitment on a specific bill. It's a ridiculous thing to send Congressmen up here to act as aldermen."

Thomas H. Werdel (R., Calif.):

"I wouldn't want to express myself on the bill now. Of course, I think people should have something to say about local government, especially if they are taxed for it."

Clyde Doyle (D., Calif.), an author of the Long Beach city charter:

"I feel very strongly in favor of that home rule bill. I feel it's a step that should be made. The essence of democracy is participa-

Soaring Mercury Sends Even the Weathermen Home

The heat wave hasn't affected the feet of the hundreds of policemen who pound egg-frying pavements, but it is hitting them in their stomachs, according to Dr. James A. O'Keefe of the Police Clinic.

"We're getting about six to eight cases a day," he said, "of gastro-intestinal trouble that seems superinduced by the heat. Some cases are just heat alone and some are from too much soda pop.

"We place some of them on sick leave for a couple of days to rest up, and some we can treat and send back to duty."

Lieut. H. F. Stewart, acting chief of Park Police, said his men's stomachs are bearing up well in the sweltering weather. But it brings a disciplinary problem.

"We're having a little trouble," he said, "making the boys keep their shirt collars buttoned and their sleeves rolled down."

The Weather Bureau itself was a heat wave victim. When Merrill Bernard, chief of the Climatological and Hydrological Services Division, went to work yesterday the temperature in the building at 24th st. nw. was 93. By 10 a. m. it picked up to 95. He then sent 120 workers home for the day.

New Strike Threatens Construction

170 Concrete Truck Drivers Walk Out For 15-Cent Increase

An unexpected walkout by approximately 170 ready-mix concrete drivers yesterday threatened again to tie up Washington area construction jobs.

The drivers met at 6 a. m. yesterday and angrily rejected the employers' offer of a 10-cent-an-hour raise in pay, retroactive to July 11. They demanded 15 cents an hour retroactive to May 15.

At 7:30 a. m., the drivers struck against the three largest producers of ready-mix concrete, Super Concrete, Maloney Concrete and Howat Concrete. The three companies supply the bulk of concrete used in the area's 100 million dollar commercial construction industry.

Some 85 other drivers—also members of AFL Teamsters Local 639—stayed on the job with four smaller companies, Patuxent Sand and Gravel, District Concrete, Silver Hill Sand and Gravel, and Virginia Concrete.

A union official explained that the four smaller operators have already informally agreed to pay their drivers 15 cents additional an hour, retroactive to May 15, the expiration date of the old work agreement.

As long ago as May 14 concrete truck drivers had voted to strike if they did not receive full retroactivity on any new benefits resulting from negotiations over a 1949 work contract. During the six and

Vinson Refuses To Stay Execution Of Two Garners

A last-minute application for stay of execution for George A. and Lawrence J. Garner was refused by Chief Justice Vinson about 5:30 p. m. yesterday.

The Garner brothers are scheduled to die in the District Jail electric chair today for the hold-up-murder of a taxicab driver early in 1948.

The application asked for time to appeal the United States Court of Appeals' refusal 24 hours earlier to delay the execution and let defense counsel prove the brothers now are insane and cannot be legally executed.

Naval Pilot And Boy, 13, Die of Polio

Two Area Residents Succumb Within 18 Hours of Each Other

A 25-year-old Navy flier of Oxon Hill, Md., died of polio at the Bethesda Naval Hospital early yesterday—the second Prince Georges County resident to succumb to the disease within 18 hours.

Lieut. (jg) James Olin Chiles, 219 Audrey lane, Oxon Hill, attached to the Naval Air Station at Anacostia, died less than three days after his illness had been diagnosed as bulbar polio.

Lieutenant Chiles death followed that of Douglas Livingstone, 13, of 5806 Queen's Chapel rd., Hyattsville, who died of the same disease at Children's Hospital Wednesday.

The deaths were the third and fourth from polio reported in the Greater Washington Area this year.

Another polio case involving a Prince Georges resident was reported to the County Health Department yesterday by District health authorities.

He is a 6-year-old boy of the 5700 block 64th ave., East Pines, Riverdale, admitted to Children's Hospital July 23.

The newest report brings the county's polio total for the year to nine and the area's to 30.

The Prince Georges County Health Department pointed out that both deaths occurred seven days after the onset of the disease. Lieutenant Chiles first became ill July 21 while the Livingstone boy developed symptoms the previous day.

The Navy said Lieutenant Chiles had reported to the dispensary at Anacostia complaining of a sore throat and difficulty in breathing several days before he was transferred to the Naval Hospital. At Bethesda his illness was immediately diagnosed as bulbar polio and he was placed on the serious list.

Young Livingstone, according to his mother, developed a fever, headaches and chills last week but did not go to bed until Sunday. A physician was called Monday and the following day the youth was admitted to the hospital. Mrs. Livingstone said she knew of no unusual activity which might have brought on the disease and was at a loss as to how her son had contracted it. She said he had been swimming in pools and in rivers on several occasions this summer.

Besides his parents, Mr. and Mrs. R. F. Livingstone, Douglas is survived by an 8-year-old brother, Ernst Carlton. His funeral will be held Saturday at 1 p. m. at the First Methodist Church in Hyattsville.

Lieut. Chiles had been stationed

U. S. Resources Can Support 300 Million, Moulton Says

The president of the Brookings Institution yesterday said the United States has the ability to support a doubled population, 100 years from now, on a plane of living eight times as high as that of the present.

Dr. Harold G. Moulton, widely known economist, is the author of a 397-page report issued by the non-profit, privately endowed research organization.

He said it is by no means certain that the country will achieve such an expansion, but that given wise policies it has the resources to do it.

Discussing those policies, he said for example, that the huge 100-year advance would require a continuing increase in productivity—or per capita production—and a "progressive expansion of mass purchasing power," preferably through price reductions.

Dr. Moulton rejected contentions that our minerals and fuels are inadequate, that the country is approaching a "static" condition, or that the Government must set up a "controled economy." He argued that after a century of phenomenal progress the economic Nine persons died in Washington yesterday either directly or indirectly from the heat.

Fourteen others collapsed in the metropolitan area as the heat wave continued and the temperature again reached the season's record of 96 degrees.

Death came to six of the victims directly as result of the heat, and three suffered heat-induced heart attacks, Dr. Christopher Murphy, deputy District coroner, said.

Meanwhile, 83,000 Federal and District Government employes were dismissed early from their jobs.

The official Government forecast for today was a repetition of those for days past, "fair, hot, and humid."

Dr. Murphy said that in addition to the nine victims he listed, a number of other persons died here from heart attacks that may have been caused by the heat.

The victims yesterday were:

Jack Tremper, 49, of 3914 21st st. ne., an employe of the National Publishing Co. He was unable to work Wednesday night, yesterday went to a doctor's office at 2426 N. Capitol st., where he collapsed. He died at Casualty Hospital with a temperature of 112.

Nellie Moss, 42, of 1411 11th st. nw., found unconscious in her home, died shortly after arrival at Freedmen's Hospital from what physicians said was a heat stroke.

Sidney Oliver, 60, of 717 C st. ne., night driver for a doughnut company. Relatives said he was unable to sleep yesterday, got up to take a walk and was found unconscious in an alley in the rear of his home. He died at Casualty Hospital with a temperature of 108.

Steven A. Williams, 55, employe of a restaurant at 727 N. Capitol st., who lives upstairs at that address. He became ill at work, went to his room and was found unconscious by a friend, Louis Limber, who took him orange juice. He was dead when an ambulance and Dr. Murphy arrived.

Joseph Rogers, 50, address unknown, a laborer for the Standard Construction Co. He collapsed on a construction job at 16th st. and Chillum rd. ne. and died shortly after arrival at Freedmen's Hospital.

Harry H. Bartlett, 68, of 317 H st. ne., taken to Casualty Hospital from his home with a temperature of 109. Died there.

Military Housing Measure Shelved Until Next Year

The $613,800,000 military public works bill—including 152 million in badly needed housing for service men and their families—has been shelved until next year.

Chairman Carl Vinson (D., Ga.) of the House Armed Services Committee told The Washington Post that he had decided not to press for passage of the measure at this session. He said he hoped to get it before the House early next year.

Some 40 million dollars in building projects in the Washington area are included in the pending Administration-sponsored bill. Other items include $97,800,000 for new or expanded military research plants, $14,500,000 for a secret "special weapons" establishment, and 302 million dollars for other buildings in Alaska, continental United States and at overseas bases.

While Vinson would not explain the reasons behind his decision, other members of the House Armed Services Committee indicated that the pressure for economy among House leaders was responsible.

Mrs. Bertha Kines, 425 N. Columbus st., Alexandria, collapsed in downtown Alexandria, treated at Alexandria Hospital and taken home.

Paul J. Thompson, 22, Pisgah, Md., collapsed while visiting a friend in a ward in Freedmen's Hospital. Put to bed and treated for several hours. Released late last night.

Robert Scales, 33, of 1722 15th st. nw., collapsed shining shoes in the Farragut Valet Service, 922 17th st. nw., treated at Emergency Hospital.

Eleanor Cobb, 39, of 2504 10th st. ne., collapsed at 15th st. and New York ave. nw., treated at Emergency Hospital and released.

John Utterbach, 28, of 1814 G st. nw., collapsed at home; condition serious at Emergency Hospital.

Albert Summers, 51, 1461 Rhode Island ave. nw., prostrated at midnight, admitted to Mount Alto Hospital.

Mary Falconeni, 50, 605 C st. sw., stricken at her home, admitted to Casualty Hospital.

The record-equalling 96-degree temperature came at 3:10 p. m., according to Government weather observers. But the mercury never got below 80 degrees yesterday and was in the nineties by noon, where it stayed into the evening.

Yesterday was the seventh day this year the 96 mark has been touched. The others were June 26, July 5, 6, 22, 25 and 26.

The bulk of the exodus of Government employes from nonair-conditioned buildings began at noon, though a few were released earlier. By 4 p. m., a compilation showed that approximately 80,000 Federal workers and 3000 for the District government had been turned loose to seek comfort or shelter elsewhere.

Top relative humidity was not quite as high as in past days, reaching a maximum of 76 per cent at 7 a. m., but the low of 42 per cent at 5 p. m., was about on a par with performance through the heat wave.

Although Washington had one of its top temperatures of the season, it suffered no more than cities all up and down the Atlantic seaboard, weather observers said. Newark, N. J., had 98; Boston, 97; New York City, 95; Dover, Del., 96; Richmond, Va., 96, and Danville, Va., 100.

Weather forecasters refused flatly to speculate on chances of relief from the heat wave. They said the heat lies across the country from the Atlantic to points west of the Mississippi and the warm air is moving eastward. Chicago, they said, had a temperature of 94 yesterday, and Kansas City 87 with prospects of a higher mark.

Arab, Israeli Assurances Spur Peace Talks

Lausanne, Switzerland, July 28 (AP).—The United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine announced today that Arab and Israeli delegations here have assured the commission of their desire to reach a just and permanent peace in Palestine.

The assurances from opposing sides in the Palestine peace talks, hopelessly deadlocked a month ago, provided the discussions here with a new optimistic atmosphere. The commission issued a communique describing the new optimism after meeting both the Arab and Israeli delegations today.

A spokesman for the commission said it was not to be expected that a peace treaty would be signed in Lausanne. However, he said, if a solution can be found here for the two major problems of Arab refugees and frontier delineation, peace can be established.

The acceptance by the Arabs yesterday of a proposal for working out the reunion of separated Arab families in Palestine was regarded as one sign of the new trend. The Israeli government has said it would agree to the return of wives and children of Arab heads of families in Israel.

Paul A. Porter, New United States member of the commission, arrived in Lausanne five days ago.

Stassen Off Base, President Declares

President Truman said yesterday that President Harold E. Stassen of the University of Pennsylvania did not know what he was talking about when he said the Chief Executive seemed to be afflicted by "poweritis."

Mr. Truman, asked at his news conference about this statement attributed to Stassen, replied that he knew nothing about it but that he was sorry Prof. Stassen has made such a statement because he didn't think he knew what he was talking about.

Barkley Says He May Crown Own 'Queen'

"I may crown one of my own one of these days—and keep her."

He denied later, however, that the remark was anything more than a jest.

"I made the remark as a facetious observation in view of my long experience in crowning queens, and that's all there was to it."

Speculation that Barkley, a widower for two years, might be considering a second marriage, first arose last Sunday when he stopped off in St. Louis for a "sort of secret luncheon" with a pretty widow, Mrs. Carleton S. Hadley.

If he has any such plans, Barkley is keeping them a dark secret. In Chicago last night, where he addressed a jewelers' convention, he jovially brushed aside questions on the subject and said he wasn't there to buy a wedding ring.

After the quip about his own queen, the Vice President tried to put the crown on backwards, experimented a bit and finally got it on straight.

Then he proceeded to "take advantage of the privilege to which I believe I'm entitled," and kissed Queen Lucyle squarely on the mouth.

"I didn't do that right, did I?" he asked to no one in particular, and kissed her again. This time the queen's crown tilted forward against the bridge of Barkley's nose.

Slot Machine Court Ruling Appealed

An eleventh-hour appeal from a Prince Georges County Circuit Court decision, which invalidated the county's new slot machine law, was filed yesterday in the Prince Georges Circuit Court.

The appeal was filed by Attorney Walter L. Green on behalf of C. Walter Hendrix, Silver Spring coin machine operator, whose suit to block one phase of the slot machine law in June led to Judge Charles C. Marbury's declaration that the entire statute is invalid.

The grounds for the appeal were not stated in the papers filed with the court, Green said last night. He said the action was designed to "keep the case open."

Yesterday was the deadline for noting an appeal from the June 28 decision, and had no action been taken, the slot machine law automatically would have become void.

Hendrix's original suit, filed against the Prince Georges Commissioners, sought only to invalidate a section of the law which would have prevented him from obtaining slot machine licenses in the county because it limited permits to county residents.

Meanwhile, officials of the Prince Georges County Council of Parent-Teachers Associations revealed yesterday the P.-T.A. group had gone on record as opposed to allocation of slot machine funds for school purposes.

Emergency Funds Bill Strikes Snag agencies spend at a higher rate than last year.

27 Billion Tied Up

Altogether, about 27 billion dollars in appropriations is tied up, mostly in the Senate. Only one of the six slow-motion measures has passed both Houses, the pork-laden civil function bill, now in conference.

Passed by the House, but still awaiting Senate action are the foreign aid, national military, Interior and third deficiency bill. The independent offices bill, called up in the Senate Wednesday, is on its last lap to final passage.

The snarl on the foreign aid bill involved more than the merits of the bill itself and so-called "crippling" ECA amendments.

Ranking members of the Appropriations Committee said that potent unit's authority was clipped when the Senate overrode a ruling by Vice President Barkley. Barkley ruled that once the Senate decides an amendment is germane, the amendment cannot be touched by a point of order. In effect, that upheld the committee's power to put legislative riders through the Senate by a majority vote.

Unless the ruling is reinstated, they said, no legislative amendments to money bills can be pased by the Senate except by a two-thirds vote, suspending the rules. This would be true even if the committee wanted to change a legislative amendment previously voted by the House.

It was on this highly technical point that yesterday's leadership conversations centered.

Hardly had the Senate met when Senator William F. Knowland (R., Calif.) served notice that he would move to reconsider the vote by which Barkley was overridden.

Later, the Appropriations Committee appointed a three-man subcommittee headed by Chairman Kenneth McKellar (D., Tenn.) to confer with the leadership of the ECA mix-up.

Senate Democratic Leader Scott W. Lucas (Ill.) in effect was asked to support reinstatement of the Barkley ruling and declined.

Specifically, Lucas turned down a proposal by Senate Republican Leader Kenneth S. Wherry (Nebr.). This would have returned the foreign aid bill to the floor with an understanding that no points of order be raised against committee amendments. Under this arrangement, controversial riders, ranging from a 50-million-dollar loan to Spain to the earmarking of two billion dollars for purchase of American farm surplus, could be acted on by a simple majority vote.

Lucas insisted both amendments violate Senate rules against new legislation on money bills. He asked the committee to agree to submit the amendments from the floor, under an arrangement requiring a two-thirds vote to pass them.

There the conferences deadlocked. More huddles on the complex tangle are scheduled today.

Senate Passes Unity Bill group opposed the 300 million dollars a year salary increase plan, unless unification—with its promise of huge savings—also was approved.

After yesterday's action, Senator Chan Gurney (R., S. Dak.), former chairman and a ranking member of the Senate committee, predicted favorable action on the pay bill at this session.

"I've checked around among the Senators and feel confident the pay legislation will pass now that the unification bill has been assured of passage," he told The Washington Post.

Final action by Senate-House conferees on the unifying measure came yesterday morning. Only two relatively minor amendments were made at that time and the final version conforms substantially with that outlined in Wednesday's Washington Post.

Two Changes Described

These two changes were made yesterday:

The new Comptroller of the armed forces will be one of the three Assistant Secretaries of Defense and not a separate post.

The chairmen of the Munitions Board and Research and Development Board will not serve on the Armed Forces Policy Council—now the War Council—as proposed.

Senate debate on the unification bill just prior to passage produced considerable evidence of "congressional intent"—often used as a guiding post by administrators and courts in interpreting legislation.

It touched on the powers of Defense Secretary Louis Johnson and the future of the Marine Corps, the Navy and Naval aviation. Senator Claude Pepper (D., Fla.) noted that "very great power" has been given to "one man" by this bill, more than anyone has possessed in the past.

Must Use Power Carefully

"I am sure it is within the contemplation of the Congress that he will use that power with an awareness of the solemn obligation which he owes to the country and to the several services . . .

"This power must be exercised tenderly by its possessor. Certainly no branch of the service should feel it is precluded from an honest advocacy of what it believes to be for the best interest of the United States."

Senator Tydings replied that he "heartily agreed" in philosophy with what Pepper had said. But he added he did not believe that dangers suggested by the latter would come to pass. Pepper had suggested Secretary Johnson could "shut the mouths of honest advocates of certain military policies" and otherwise become a one-man ruler.

The Marylander pointed to the fact that Congressional committees still will consult the Secretaries and military chiefs of the Army, Navy and Air Force. Furthermore, he said, the bill specifically guarantees every member of the Joint Chiefs access to the President and each Secretary and JCS member the right to appeal to Congress.

Pepper called attention to the "manner in which" Secretary Johnson had canceled the Navy's super-aircraft carrier. Tydings pointed out this was perfectly legal, but agreed that there was "room for improvement" in the way the cancellation was handled.

He added that "there is a lesson for everyone" in the incident and predicted it would not be repeated.

Senator Paul H. Douglas (D., Ill.), a former Marine, asked and received assurances from Tydings that the bill would neither result in abolition of the Marine Corps nor affect its roles and missions. The latter said he didn't believe a "single member of Congress" favored this.

Senators Henry Cabot Lodge (R., Mass.) and Wayne Morse (R., Oreg.) both indorsed the bill as a "step on the road to true unification." The latter "served notice" he would press for adoption of his ideas merging the services at the next session.

"This is perhaps the best bill that possibly could be evolved for unification at this time, Tydings told them.

invite a combination of political and military aggression."

Three quarters of the committee's 25 members were present, and most indicated by their comments they favored the general principle of military aid to European pact members and certain other non-Communist countries, as embodied in the bill.

Several indicated general support of the measure, which would extend the bulk of its aid to Western Europe. But most indicated they have various "reservations" in their mind at this time.

"Principle Is Sound"

The greatest number of such reservations centered on the view that no large amount of aid should be given to such countries in the absence of an overall strategic "plan."

"I am for military aid," declared Representative Pfeifer (D., N. Y.), "but what assurance is there that aided countries will cooperate?"

"The principle is sound," said Representative Richards (D., S. C.), who ranks on the committee just below Chairman Kee (D., W. Va.), but, " . . . It is simply too much to get out on a limb with when we have no assurance yet how far they will go."

"My mind is sorely troubled," he said, "when it comes to how much we are going to provide."

He said he favors aid to Greece, Turkey, Korea, Iran and the Philippines — $300,580,000; the bill's 155 million dollars for raw materials to increase western European defense production; the 45-million-dollar "emergency fund" and the $10,970,000 Administration outlay.

Unified Command Asked

What concerns him, he said, is the $938,450,000 for equipment and technical aid to western Europe, "before any plan has been worked out" under the treaty.

Representative Vorys (R., Ohio) said he favors military aid, but was "shocked to find that this present plan has so little to do for common defense."

A need for assurance of planning was also noted by Representative Javits (R., N. Y.), who proposed a revision to the bill calling for a "unified command of the forces of recipient nations."

Representative Merrow (R., N. H.) suggested this Nation "insist" on adoption of some military unifying plan.

To these questions, Acheson replied there probably never has been a previous situation where "the compelling self-interest of all the parties forced them to cooperate more than in the present situation.

"This is a life and death matter for them," declared Acheson.

The "heart of the defense system," he said, "will come from the Western union countries" (Great Britain, France, Belgium, the Netherlands and Luxembourg) where defense plans have been under way for a year.

"We are not doing some uncoordinated act in the essential interim step," said Acheson.

China Aid Brought Up

As for insistence on unified command as a prerequisite to the proposed aid, Acheson said this sort of arbitrariness would have no greater hope for success in free countries abroad than it would if Americans were told "they must do something, or else."

At the hearing, Acheson faced also a small barrage of demands to explain why aid to Nationalist China is not included in the bill.

"When will you have a further statement of policy on China and Asia?" asked Vorys, who said he would not agree there is more threat of aggression in Europe than the Far East.

Acheson replied he hopes "within a very short time, to ask the committee to let me meet with them," to discuss China.

"Why is China not in the program?" demanded Representative Fulton (R., Pa.).

"Because," said Acheson deliberately, "in the combined judgment of everybody who looked at that situation, military assistance is not feasible at the present time."

"But it is feasible in Korea?" Fulton pressed.

"Yes," replied Acheson.

Among the fullest measures of support for the arms program as drafted was a comment by Representative Gordon (D., Ill.) who said, "I intend to support the bill; I have no questions."

Representative Helen Gahagan Douglas (D., Calif.) declared: "I believe in the pact, and I shall support the legislation before us. I am not one of those who has lost heart—I think peace is obtainable."

While there are "many questions" about the program, she said, "I think we can answer them as they come up."

In an exchange on China, Mrs. Douglas asked Acheson if the Joint Chiefs of Staff ever drew up a plan for the defense of China which was "vetoed" by the State Department.

"I know of none," Acheson replied.

"Did they ever present any plan?" asked Fulton. Acheson said not to his knowledge, but declared, "We work as closely together as any department should."

Truman Picks Clark for Supreme Court Seat

minority faith on the Supreme Court.

Mr. Truman answered promptly that he didn't think religious faith had anything to do with a justice of the Supreme Court. If a man is qualified, he said, he wouldn't care what his faith is, whether it is Catholic, Baptist or Jewish.

Mr. Truman is a Baptist; Attorney General Clark a Presbyterian, and Senator McGrath a Catholic.

The President summoned Clark and McGrath to the White House yesterday morning to tell them what he had in mind. They entered by a side door and left the same way, with the result that newsmen knew nothing about their visit.

There was no doubt about Clark's ultimate acceptance. He virtually accepted in a statement released at the Department of Justice after Mr. Truman's announcement. This said:

"The honor bestowed upon me by the President in offering me a position on the Supreme Court of the United States is great.

"It is with humility that I approach it.

"Such a position is the greatest challenge that can be placed before a lawyer.

"I hope I am worthy of the honor the President has paid me."

Senator McGrath has told intimates in the past that he would not be interested in a Cabinet post. These intimates believed last night, however, that he would accept the President's offer and take over as Attorney General. He would not be a stranger in the Department of Justice, having served as Solicitor General in 1945-46.

The Rhode Island lawmaker told reporters that he was "highly gratified" that Mr. Truman had shown confidence in him by offering him the Cabinet job. He said he would give it earnest consideration.

"I'm going home over the weekend and talk it over with my family and my associates," he said.

Gov. John O. Pastore of Rhode Island is a Democrat. Thus, if McGrath should leave the Senate, he would be succeeded by a Democrat.

There would be two Catholics in the Truman Cabinet if McGrath should become Attorney General. Maurice J. Tobin, the Secretary of Labor, is of that faith.

This would not be unprecedented. For a time, in the administration of President Franklin D. Roosevelt, the late Frank Murphy was Attorney General and James A. Farley was Postmaster General. A similar situation would have existed earlier in the New Deal had not death intervened. Roosevelt offered the post of Attorney General to Senator Thomas J. Walsh of Montana not long after the 1932 election. However, Walsh died on his honeymoon before inauguration day.

The manner in which President Truman made the Clark-McGrath announcement yesterday was as surprising as the announcement itself.

Mr. Truman, at the outset of his news conference, read a detailed statement dealing with relations among the United States, Britain and Canada in connection with the atomic bomb. There was a brief lull after this.

A reporter, talking as if he just wanted to keep the ball rolling, asked the President if he was near a decision in picking a man for the Supreme Court vacancy.

Yes, said Mr. Truman, smiling, and I'll tell you his name if you want to know.

He then told about his huddle with Clark and McGrath in the morning. When a reporter said that he hadn't seen either of the men enter the White House, the President laughed and replied: No, and you didn't see them go out either.

Mr. Truman was asked whether McGrath would have to resign as chairman of the Democratic National Committee if he became Attorney General.

He said he did not know, but added that McGrath would certainly have to resign from the Senate.

Duke Shoop of the Kansas City Star suggested that, with McGrath out of the Senate, Bill Boyle would be a logical choice for Democratic national chairman. Boyle, an old friend of the President's from Kansas City, is now executive vice chairman of the committee, and is the Administration's chief adviser on patronage.

Mr. Truman laughed when asked about Boyle and told reporters to go ahead an speculate; he would have no comment at all.

Munitions Board Post Declined by Canaday

The White House announced yesterday that Ward M. Canaday has turned down President Truman's offer of the chairmanship of the Munitions Board.

Canaday, of Toledo, Ohio, is chairman of the finance committee of the Willys-Overland Co.

He wrote the President that he found himself unable to "free myself" from other responsibilities in order to devote full time to the chairmanship.

The President expressed "deep regret" but asked Canaday to continue in his present capacity as a consultant to the board.

300 Million Seen In U. S. Eventually

promise of American life remains undiminished.

In concluding that our natural resources, if systematically preserved and fostered, are "adequate" for a great economic expansion, Dr. Moulton placed emphasis on things like this:

Electronics, plastics, scientific agriculture, soilless food production, new metals, new methods of exploring for minerals, synthetic production of oil, development of low-grade iron ore.

He estimated that on the basis of past spending habits and present income, a rise in the population to 300 million and an eightfold rise in living standards would multiply the Nation's dollar spending as follows:

For food and nutrition, about 8 times; for shelter and home maintenance, about 16 times; for attire and personal care, about 20 times; for health and education, about 30 times, and for recreation and travel, about 33 times.

But the actual physical quantity of goods required would not be that great, because much of the increased spending would be for services rather than goods, and much of it would be for goods of better quality.

A few quotes:

On iron ore—"In the Lake Superior region alone there are stupendous deposits of lower grade ores which have not as yet been drawn upon. Such ores, called taconite, would last at current rates of consumption something like 600 years."

On oil—"Abundant supplies of oil and gasoline seem assured for many generations to come," partly because of synthetic production from coal, whose reserves are "practically unlimited."

On paper—"A recently developed chemical process, whereby paper is made from quick growing southern pine, has made it possible to increase the supply of this product almost indefinitely."

On erosion—"The problem of soil erosion is now definitely on the way to solution."

Dr. Moulton, at 65, has been president of the Brookings Institution since 1922. The title of his study is "Controlled Factors in Economic Development." He made it under a grant of funds from the Falk Foundation, Pittsburgh.

There are several "ifs" in Dr. Moulton's picture. For example, he said the vast expansion would require:

1. A continuing increase in productivity. This in turn would require constant scientific and technological development, new tools, replacement of obsolete plants, better management methods, including personnel practices, a progressive increase in the efficiency of workmen, adequate incentives for labor and management and investors, and "at least a fair degree of assurance with respect to the perpetuity of the private enterprise system."

2. A progressive expansion of mass purchasing power. Dr. Moulton said "the unfulfilled desires of the masses constitute the great potential markets of the future." He said there must be "a constantly broadening" distribution of income.

Dr. Moulton said taxation in the higher income levels and wage increases both may have some legitimate function in this redistribution of income, but he said a much better way of doing it would be progressive price reductions, because they benefit all segments of the population.

3. Large-scale enterprise. "Under modern conditions considerations of efficiency require operating companies of great size. . . . The most striking feature of the modern economic system is the magnitude of the physical instruments employed in production . . ."

4. Monetary stability. By this, Dr. Moulton meant that the Government should "refrain permanently from altering the weight of the monetary unit (the dollar of gold)—either up or down."

5. Fiscal stability. He proposed that the Government, instead of deciding what expenditures must be made and then setting out to get the required money, should first determine what taxes should be levied over a four-year period and then hold expenditures well within those limits. He acknowledged that such a program "cannot of course be expected to meet fully the extraordinary requirements of war emergencies or of acute business depressions."

Concerning depressions, Dr. Moulton concludes that they are inevitable. But he says cooperative effort among all groups—Government, industry, labor and agriculture—can lessen their severity and shorten their duration.

He says the best system for the United States is a system of private enterprise with "regulation" —not "control."

He believes the Interstate Commerce Commission, Federal Trade Commission, and Securities & Exchange Commission have gone too far toward "usurpation of vital managerial functions," and says Government regulation is possible without that.

He said: "If war, or concentrated preparation for war, should continue to dominate the economic life of nations, there is little prospect of economic stability or progress. We can only hope that in due course mankind will find his way to enduring peace."

Federal Aid to Education Bill Is Dead, Representative Lesinski Says

By the United Press

The controversial 300-million-dollar-a-year Federal aid to education bill is dead for this session of Congress, Chairman John Lesinski (D., Mich.) of the House Labor Committee, asserted yesterday.

"There is no chance of a bill this year," he told a reporter. "The obvious fact is that there just isn't enough time left in which we can act."

It was the first time a high-ranking Democrat had openly stated that the Senate-approved bill carrying out one of President Truman's top campaign pledges, has no chance of getting on the lawbooks this year. Leading Democrats have admitted privately that the bitter religious dispute over the bill has about killed its chances until next year.

President Truman, meanwhile declined comment on the controversy between Francis Cardinal Spellman of New York and Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt over the education bill.

He told his news conference he believes the matter has been well taken care of in the newspapers.

Lesinski said he will name a subcommittee this fall to survey the situation. He said he has heard that several States are not making full use of their tax powers to get school funds.

Representative Hugo S. Sims, jr. (D., S. C.) has announced he will seek to force action on the bill in Lesinski's committee today.

Sales Tax to Cut Into Building Dollar

By Sam Zagoria
Post Reporter

(Sixth of a Series)

The sales tax will take a piece out of most building dollars. It will affect new construction, alterations and repairs, heating, installations of facilities and utility services.

In new building, repairs and alterations, the tax will be levied thus:

1. If the contractor sells the materials and charges separately for labor, he will collect a tax on the materials.

2. If he furnishes both for a lump sum, he pays his supplier the tax on the materials or submits the tax himself to the sales tax administrator on the usual returns. In such cases, he is considered the consumer and may not pass the tax directly to his customers.

3. If he furnishes both on a cost-plus basis, he has the same choice. This also applies if he furnishes them on an "upset or guaranteed" ceiling price.

4. If he fabricates all or part of the articles used, he has the same choice of payments. Examples of this are the preparation of roofing, cornices, gutter pipe, furnace pipe and ventilation ducts.

Public Buildings Exempt

Construction work done on semi-public buildings or Government-owned structures are exempt. The contractor must maintain records showing how these tax-exempt materials were used.

Actual sales of new and used structures are tax-free.

Sales of natural gas, oil, electricity, solid fuels such as coal and wood or steam are taxable except when they are purchased for resale, for use in manufacturing, assembling, processing or refining or purposes incidental to these.

Sales of ice for any use, however, is tax-free.

The sales tax will be shown on bills presented by the utility firms in September covering August service.

Some common problems:

Q. If a contractor collects the tax on materials, how does he avoid paying the tax to his supplier?

A. He submits a resale certificate.

Q. If I contract to have such items as venetian blinds, electrical fixtures, an oil burner and cabinets installed in my home, do I have to pay the tax?

A. Yes, a homeowner will have to pay sales tax on the full retail selling price of such items, but installation costs are tax-free, if stated separately. If stated in lump sum, the entire amount is subject to tax.

Status of Utilities

Q. Do utility firms pay a tax on materials used in producing transportation, gas or electric service?

A. No, they are exempt since they already pay a gross receipts or mileage tax.

Q. If a commercial office building or apartment house purchases electricity from Pepco and then resells it to tenants, is a tax charged?

A. None is charged by Pepco since this is an example of purchasing service for resale. If an exemption is taken on this basis, however, the building owner must collect the sales tax on individual billings. Many have indicated they would rather pay utility firms the tax and avoid becoming collectors.

Q. Are sales of utility service to churches, charitable groups and other semi-public institutions tax-exempt? To legations and embassies? To governmental units?

A. Yes, in all cases listed. On all except the governmental sales, however, a certificate of exemption must be furnished to the utility company involved.

Q. A firm fabricates ornamental iron railings, furniture or awnings. Are utilities used in this connection tax-exempt?

A. Yes, this is considered manufacturing. A tax will be collected, however, on sales of the products.

Gas Used by Restaurants

Q. If my restaurant uses gas in preparing foods, is a tax charged on the gas?

A. No, this is listed as processing, one of the exempt sections.

Q. Are exemptions on utility service purchases automatic?

A. No, semi-public institution customers must secure a "certificate of exemption" for general use and others a "specific exemption." If you think you are entitled to such exemption, apply to the Sales Tax Division in the District Building. If you are, a certificate will be issued and a copy sent to the utility company. Tax collections will be made until the certificates are furnished.

Q. Is the use of electricity in lighting a factory or shop considered incidental to the manufacturing process?

A. Yes, it is therefore tax-free.

Q. Is the heating of sales and display rooms off premises or off-premises garages, where trucks are kept, considered incidental to a manufacturing firm's tax-free processes?

A. No.

Q. If gas is used for taxable and nontaxable purposes on the same meter, how is the tax levied?

A. The "larger portion of use" determines the taxability.

Atomic Scientists Called Vulnerable To Eye Cataracts

Champaign, Ill., July 28 (AP).—Eye cataracts are an occupational disease of Atomic scientists, the University of Illinois trustees decided today.

The board affirmed that neutron radiation from the university's cyclotron caused cataracts to form over both eyes of Dr. Lloyd Smith, a former U. of I. atomic scientist.

Smith was employed as a research assistant at Illinois from 1943 to 1945. He is now a member of the Staff of the University of California's radiation laboratory at Berkeley.

The trustees approved a recommendation by its committee on accident compensation that Smith be awarded a claim for medical treatment.

British Press Warned to Act On Standards

London, July 28 (U.P.).—Herbert Morrison, majority leader in the House of Commons, intimated strongly today the government will set up a council "to raise the standards of the newspaper industry and the journalistic profession" if publishers refuse to do so.

Morrison said in today's debate on the recent report of a royal commission on the press that the government was "generally sympathetic" to legislation that would keep the larger newspaper chains from expanding further.

The royal commission reported the British press was "inferior to none in the world," but suggested that a supervisory press council be formed.

The Commons accepted the royal commission's report without a record vote after an all-day debate.

'Time' Charges Argentines Held Up Story

Buenos Aires, July 28 (AP).—A Time magazine representative today said a dispatch filed by its Buenos Aires correspondent was halted by Argentine postal authorities. The United States Embassy said it is preparing a protest to the Argentine government.

The dispatch, filed by correspondent Robert Neville, described an investigation into charges police tortured prisoners being questioned on suspicion of crimes. Prisoners said they were given electric needle shocks.

The story was filed July 23 with the Argentine Postoffice, which operates the Buenos Aires branch of Press Wireless. Neville's office said it learned yesterday the dispatch never was received in New York.

At the same time the United States Embassy said it learned that a copy of Neville's dispatch was delivered to Gen. Arturo Bertollo, chief of the Federal Police, whose department has been under investigation.

Argentina normally maintains no press censorship. The Inter-American Press Congress in Quito, Ecuador, July 15, acknowledged this while criticizing Argentine government measures restricting liberty of the press within the country.

Nonetheless, Time magazine reported last December 18 that 1300 words were eliminated without notifying Neville of the deletion and without noting that censorship had been exercised.

United States Ambassador James Bruce protested to the Argentine Foreign Office against secret censorship but received no reply.

Panama Swears In Acting President

'Hill' Pledged Share In Atom Plan Draft

President Truman yesterday said a new long-range policy of sharing atomic information with Britain and Canada must be worked out—and promised that Congress will help make the decision.

Amid reports that the British are seeking latest know-how on the atomic bomb, Mr. Truman told his news conference in a statement that present rules of cooperation among the three nations are "limited in scope and duration."

These, he said, involve exchange of certain scientific and technical information and "collaboration on matters of raw material supply of common concern."

The United States must depend to a large extent on Britain and Canada for the basic bomb raw material, uranium. Britain is presumably in a position to put pressure on the United States for a greater share in atomic facts than she has been getting.

To Hold Basic Talks

The statement said the three nations will hold basic talks on questions involved in fixing long-range policy.

He emphasized that "these exploratory conversations" will involve no agreements or commitments by the United States on these questions. They will precede further talks with Congress.

"In these consultations with Congres, we shall have to decide together what course of action it is wisest to take," Mr. Truman said.

The Truman statement traced the wartime history of collaboration among the three nations in working on the atomic bomb. It was agreed in 1943 that a major effort would be concentrated in this country to produce an atomic bomb at the earliest date, the President said.

Then, in 1947, he said, the three countries adopted a uniform system of handling information jointly developed. In January, 1948, the present rules of cooperation were worked out after consultation with the Senate-House Committee on Atomic Energy.

Need to Consider Future

Since they are limited, Mr. Truman said, "it is necessary to consider the future, taking into account the developments made in this field by the three countries and to maintain the status quo while this consideration takes place."

It was the Administration's second peaceful gesture toward Capitol Hill since opposition boiled up over the question of giving atomic bomb secrets to Britain.

Senators had threatened to fight it out on the floor and demand a change in the 1946 atomic energy law if Mr. Truman attempted to give the final know-how to Britain without congressional approval. The subject of whether Mr. Truman had power to do so was reported to have stirred a fuss at a secret Blair House conference the night of July 14.

But on Wednesday Secretary of State Acheson told the Senate-House Atomic Committee that Mr. Truman feels any action toward sharing the secret must have support of Congress.

Asked About "Gloom"

Reporters asked Mr. Truman why the atmosphere around the presidential residence was "so gloomy" the night of the closely guarded meeting of top officials.

Mr. Truman replied that it's a gloomy subject. He repeated the words. He said an atomic explosion is something we all dread.

"I never want to have to use it again," he added referring to his decision to drop the bomb on Japan. He gave reporters permission to quote these words. Both British and Canadians had full access to atomic information during World War II. But the atomic energy law, establishing governmental controls, wrote in restrictions against sharing materials and industrial secrets with foreign nations. There was a question whether the industrial reference applied to minitary secrets. Opinion differed on Capitol Hill. Some Senators demanded the law be amended to make certain.

Big 5 and Canada to Open Atom Plan Talks Aug. 9

Lake Success, N. Y., July 28 (U.P.). The Big Five powers and Canada will start discussions among themselves August 9 in an effort to agree on a basic plan for world atomic control, it was disclosed tonight.

The American delegation was expected to be headed by John C. Hickerson, Assistant Secretary of State. It was expected Sir Terence Shone would sit for Britain, Francois de Rose for France and Dr. H. C. Wei for China.

Frederick H. Osborn, United States delegate to the United Nations, said he expected a long series of closed sessions, with an interim progress report likely to be made to the General Assembly's September meeting.

"Nobody will be trying to push the Russians into an agreement," he said, "but nobody is willing to negotiate with them any longer on the basis of their plan, which simply comprises three steps: National ownership of atomic plants, with periodic inspections by an international agency, and with that agency subject at all times to a veto by any of the Big Five powers."

Indonesia Crisis Passed

Batavia, Java, July 28 (U.P.).—Informed sources said today that the "crisis" stage has passed in the "Dutch-Indonesian cease-fire talks at Jogjakarta and that a United Nations-sponsored agreement probably will be ratified this weekend.

$40,000 Seized, 187 Arrested In Vice Raid

Maple Shade, N. J., July 28 (U.P.).—State troopers seized 187 men and $40,000 today in a surprise raid on a concrete gambling stronghold protected by a look-out tower and a "raid-proof" inner door.

The hangout, which police said was operated by a "big-time gambling syndicate," was equipped with dice and card tables, slot machines, a racing board and a race ticker.

The raiders confiscated three revolvers and a carbine hidden behind a trap door. Most of the money was taken from the shirt-sleeved men who jammed the gambling room to capacity. Police took $12,000 from one man.

Fourteen of the suspects were held in $5000 bail each as "principals." Five others were held as material witnesses, and 168 were listed as "frequenters" and deposited $25 cash bail.

The majority of the employes and patrons were Philadelphians. The raid was surrounded by such secrecy that even local county police were not aware of it.

Industrial Spy 'Loot' of Reds Put in Billions

American industrial know-how "worth billions of dollars" has been stolen by Soviet spies in the last 25 years, a Senate Judiciary Subcommittee was told yesterday.

The witness was J. Anthony Marcus of New York City, president of the Institute of Foreign Trade. He described the institute as a private organization that advises American exporting and importing firms.

Marcus, who said he came to this country from Russia in 1910, testified that "I have been witnessing the filching of American technological know-how" by Russian agents over the last quarter of a century.

"The center of the Soviet Economic spy system in America," he said, "has been and still is the Amtorg Trading Corp., of New York." Amtorg is the Russian government's trading agency.

The committee is holding hearings on a bill of Senator McCarran (D., Nev.) to make it easier for the Government to bar or deport subversive aliens.

Marcus told the committee that the threat of "industrial espionage in America" is taken too lightly.

He testified that Russia's economic progress would have been impossible without the technological know-how "they have managed to carry away from here."

Soviet agents, he said, find it "comparatively easy to carry away a blueprint or a shop drawing from a plant, have it microfilmed or photostated and return it the next morning without detection."

He said the Russians also have obtained American industrial secrets by "buying sample of our equipment, by deceiving out firms with promises of larger orders in the future—a future which never came and never will come as long as the Soviet government exists."

Marcus said that in 1932 a new vice chairman of the Amtorg Trading Corp., named Nikolai Gavrilov, arrived in New York. He said Gavrilov knew nothing about doing business in the United States, but was a leading member of the secret police.

Marcus said the Soviet satellite nations now have set up state trading companies like Amtorg.

He told the committee that every member of the Soviet diplomatic mission to this country, every commercial representative and "every man and woman serving their interests in the United Nations" are duty-bound to engage in spy work.

He indorsed McCarran's bill as a means of "stemming this tide" and suggested amendments to make it more restrictive.

Chinese Admit Red Capture Of Rail Town

Canton, China, July 28 (AP).—An official dispatch from the Hunan Province warfront today acknowledged Communist capture of Chuchow, on the railway 315 miles north of this refugee Nationalist capital.

The Nationalist military spokesman, however, said Changsha, a strong defense point 32 miles by rail north of Chuchow, still was in Government hands and would be defended. A private radiophone call from Changsha described its situation as quiet.

The Nationalist spokesman, Gen. Ten Wen-yi, said the main armies in Hunan had not yet joined battle. He said the Reds were using 390,000 men organized into 15 armies.

The spokesman gave no estimates of Nationalist strength, but said Gen. Pai Chung-hsi, the Government commander, now had his headquarters at Hengyang, 265 miles north of Canton.

Chinese Free Editor, Captive in Pay Dispute

Shanghai, July 28 (U.P.).—The American editor and a business representative of the Shanghai Evening Post and Mercury were allowed to leave a downtown office today after being locked in for 52 hours as a result of a wage dispute with employes of the paper.

Randall Gould, editor, and Charles Miner, business representative for C. V. Starr, wealthy industrialist who owns the newspaper, went home weary and hungry after two days in which they had consumed only biscuits and water.

Gould and Miner were permitted to leave the office in the Asiatic Underwriters Building after promising to ask Starr to pay the employes their salary for July and part of June.

Ex-Los Angeles Police Head, 4 Officers Indicted in Probe

Herbert

Reed

Horrall

Los Angeles, July 28 (AP).—Los Angeles' multisided vice blowoff hit twin climaxes today, with the death of a mobster and the indictment of five police officials.

Edward (Neddie) Herbert, husky aide to gambler Mickey Cohen, succumbed to shotgun slugs which severed his spine during an attempt to assassinate Cohen eight days ago. Cohen is recovering from a shoulder wound.

The county grand jury charged perjury against retired police chief Clement B. Horrall, assistant chief Joseph F. Reed, Capt. Cecil H. Wisdom, head of the personnel bureau; Lieut. Rudy Wellpot, in charge of the administrative vice squad, and C. V. Jackson, Wellpot's chief aide.

It also accused Wellpot and Jackson of bribery.

[The United Press said one indictment accused Jackson of visiting vice queen Brenda Allen at least once a week during a two-month period to "collect bribes and engage in immoral relations." It said he collected $50 a week for each girl in Miss Allen's Hollywood callhouse and listed five specific occasions on which he and Wellpott allegedly collected a total of $800.]

Mayor Fletcher Bowron quickly came to the defense of Horrall, who was his appointee, and Reed. The mayor, against whom recall petitions are circulating as an outgrowth of the current furore about vice, said he'll be "very glad to go into court and testify to the character, integrity and truthfulness" of the top brass. As for the other officers, he said they were "working to keep big-time gambling and gangsters out of the city."

Horrall is vacationing in Polson, Mont. He quit his job, giving ill health as his reason, after his appearance before the grand jury a month ago. All the others are on duty.

Stronger Arms Program Urged By Fleet Chief

Salem, Ill., July 28 (AP).—Admiral W. H. P. Blandy, commander of the Atlantic Fleet, today called for more arms and war planning to prepare for "a possible enemy."

He said the time to arm is "while we still have a breathing spell before a possible enemy acquires atomic bombs and the long range planes for a world-wide delivery service."

Blandy, speaking at a military reunion, said this Nation's forces were unified "to insure maximum security. Each member of the team predicates its planning on a common strategic concept for the conduct of the war against our most probable enemy."

Father of Six Shot, Beaten By Robed Mob

Columbia, S. C., July 28 (AP).—A young Negro, father of six children, claimed today a masked mob shot and beat him and his brother last Monday night. His family, he said, was terrorized.

The half dozen night riders told him, he added, that they came to give him and his brother their "civil rights."

Elliot Bates, 30, was in a Columbia hospital with gunshot wounds and an abrasion on the head.

The brother, Harry Bates, was not hospitalized.

Bates told this story:

"About five or six white men with shirt masks on their faces came to my home. My wife was the first to get up. They kicked her and told her to get back to bed. Then they got my brother, carried him out, shot him through the shoulder and beat him up.

"Then they came in and got me out of bed, saying 'get up there nigger,' dragged me out on the porch and one of them hit me over the head with a blackjack. Then they shot me in my left hand and left thigh. The chillun was screaming and hollerin'.

"I ain't had nothing to do with no civil rights. I don't know any reason why they shoulda come to get me."

Bates said recently a first cousin and a neighbor's 13-year-old daughter were beaten up.

Workmen Move House, Forgetful Owner, Too

Rock Falls, Ill., July 28 (AP).—Douglas Unger woke up yesterday morning to find his bed rocking to-and-fro and the bedroom doing an imitation Mexican hat dance.

He thought he was experiencing his first earthquake.

Unger quickly propped himself up on the pillows and looked out the window.

Workmen were busily moving the house down the street.

"I forgot all about ordering the house moved," Unger said. "It was my day off and I was so sleepy. It was the oddest sensation."

Tito Turns Back Greek Rebels Seeking Refuge

Greek Frontier Post 20 on the Yugoslav Border, July 28 (AP).—Premier Marshal Tito of Yugoslavia is closing the Greek-Yugoslav frontier to guerillas but border relations between the two countries remain frigid.

The Yugoslavs are turning back guerillas who seek refuge. Tito has doubled the strength of his border guards.

According to villagers in Aghia Paraskevi the last guerilla raid occurred 40 days ago.

Despite Tito's changed policy toward the Communist-led Greek rebels, his attitude toward the Greek government in Athens is unchanged. Earlier reports of cordiality between Greek army and Yugoslav troops apparently were groundless. Top level Greek military officials have officially denied the reports.

Pact Nations To Ask U. S. Defense Head

London, July 28 (AP).—The Chiefs of Staff of the United States fighting services will be asked, on their approaching visit to Europe, to recommend an American to be named head of the Atlantic Pact defense organization, well-informed sources said tonight.

Continental members of the Atlantic Pact believe the chance of getting military aid will be better if an American takes the leadership, and that the United States will take a keener interest in European military problems if an American is in charge.

Field Marshal Viscount Montgomery is now head of the Western Union defense organization.

The Chiefs of Staff of the Army, Navy and Air Force are to leave Washington Friday for a 10-day survey in Europe.

Man Shipwrecked In Bay Rescued By Destroyer

Patuxent, Md., July 28 (AP).—A tale of shipwreck on Chesapeake Bay was unfolded here by William E. Copeland, jr., of Severna Park, who was rescued from his storm-battered 14-foot motorboat by the Destroyer Henley.

He was picked up yesterday near Cape Charles, Va., unconscious from exhaustion and exposure. A storm Tuesday sliced his sea anchor, bashed open his fuel tank and sent his oars, food, drinking water and gasoline reserve overboard.

Repeated attempts to flag down passing ships failed. Around noon, the next day, he lost consciousness. The next thing he knew he was on the deck of the destroyer and brandy was being poured down his throat.

Total Cases in U. S. Top 1948 Figure

Nationally, Public Health Service reported yesterday, 1949 to date holds the record for number of cases reported since weekly reports were begun in 1920. New cases from January 1 to last Saturday totaled 6339.

By comparison, last year's total for the corresponding period was 4580 cases. And 1948, with a year's total of 27,680 polio cases, was the second worst polio year on statistical record. Worst year was 1916, when more than 30,000 cases were noted.

Health authorities were quick to note, however, that indications point to an earlier peak this year.

Petain Critically Ill

Paris, July 28 (AP).—Former Marshal Henri Phillipe Petain is barely able to walk and has almost completely lost his mental faculties, his son-in-law, Phillipe de Heroin, said today.

State by State records of polio cases reported thus far this year and for comparable periods last year, as compiled by the National Office of Vital Statistics, U. S. Public Health Service. (Statisticians point out that since December, 1948, polio cases in epidemic States, notably Texas, California and North Carolina, piled up on the health authorities and were carried over into early January figures of 1949).

Building Again Threatened

one half weeks carpenters'-laborers' strike, negotiations between the drivers and the employers were postponed pending outcome of the dual walkout.

During this long strike, according to Attorney Francis Kelly, representing the employers, the operators kept their drivers on the jobs, at a minimum of $38 a week, even though there was not enough work to keep them busy. For this reason, Kelly explained yesterday, the big three operators feel that any retroactivity in wage increases should date back only to the end of the carpenters' strike, or July 11.

Negotiations between the union and concrete truck operators were resumed shortly after the carpenters'-laborers' walkout was settled for an increase in pay of 10 cents an hour.

The employers offered the drivers—who've been getting $1.35 an hour—a pay hike of 5 cents an hour at once, plus 5 cents more next May. The union turned down this offer. The employers then offered an increase of 7½ cents an hour for a two-year contract.

At this point in the negotiation, the dump truck drivers, who also belong to Local 639, won a 16-cnets-an-hour raise under threat of strike. Whereupon the concrete drivers rejected the 7½ cents, at a meeting last Tuesday night, and scheduled a strike for Thursday morning unless their employers conceded 15 cents an hour with retroactivity to May 15.

On Wednesday afternoon Charles Bell, the union's president, met with Attorney Kelly—now representing only the three larger companies—and with the encouragement of Federal Mediator R. W. Foodrich worked out a tentative peace proposal for 10 cents an hour increase in pay, retroactive to July 11, with the contract to run only to May 15, 1950.

Kelly also agreed that his people would take under consideration a proposition that 5 cents more be added to the drivers' wages next May 15.

All persons participating in the conference agreed to withhold details on the settlement overnight so that Bell could put the proposal up to his shop stewards and rank and file. However, both The Washington Post and the Washington Times-Herald unofficially learned of the 10-cent offer and printed the news. As a result, the members of the union, and the shop stewards as well, read of the tentative settlement before getting the news from their officials.

When Bell showed up at yesterday's early morning meeting, he was greeted with a chorus of "No Dime." In the ensuing discussion, it was learned, the drivers insisted that 10 cents was not enough, that retroactivity must go back to May 15. Furthermore, many members were angered by the belief that the tentative settlement was the actual settlement, and that they would not be given the chance to approve or reject the new agreement.

The Washington area builders were caught by surprise when the strike broke out yesterday morning, because they, too, believed a firm agreement had been reached. And Kelly, who has done the bulk of the management negotiations in the recent series of wage agreements in the industry, was ready yesterday to take off on a vacation.

There was no immediate effect on building by yesterday's strike. But within the next day or two, the lack of concrete could begin tying up all construction. Carpenters, laborers and rodmen would be the first to be laid off for lack of work involving use of concrete.

Sen. Neely in Line To Head D. C. Unit

By Edward F. Ryan
Post Reporter

Senator Matthew M. Neely (D., W. Va.) probably will succeed Senator J. Howard McGrath (D., R. I.) as chairman of the Senate District Committee if the latter accepts the post of Attorney General offered him by President Truman.

McGrath's departure from the committee he has headed since the Eighty-first Congress started would leave this lineup of potential successors in order of seniority on the Democratic side of the committee: Senator Olin D. Johnston (D., S. C.), Senator Neely, Senator Estes Kefauver (D., Tenn.), Senator Lester C. Hunt (D., Wyo.), Senator J. Allen Frear, jr. (D., Del.), and Senator Bert H. Miller (D., Idaho).

Johnston passed up the District chairmanship this year to head

Kefauver

Neely

the Post Office and Civil Service Committee, and he said yesterday he certainly would not now give up the Civil Service spot to head the District Committee.

Johnston predicted the District place would go to Neely, and the latter indicated he would probably take it. Excluding Johnston, the other five Democrats all joined the committee with this Congress. Neely was given top place because of prior service in the Senate. He was elected for one term in 1922, and later for two more terms which ended in 1943.

Kefauver is ranked next for his service in the House. The rankings on the District Committee were decided by the Senate Democratic Steering Committee.

McGrath's visit to the White House yesterday to discuss the Attorney General appointment kept him away from the Senate District Committee meeting. In his absence, Senator Kefauver presided as acting chairman. Neely visited the committee briefly.

Senator McGrath has been a member of the District Committee since he entered the Senate in 1947. In the Republican Eightieth Congress he had the unusual assignment of being the Democratic chairman of District subcommittee—an assignment given by former Senator Douglass Buck (R., Del.) then District chairman.

When McGrath became chairman he reciprocated by assigning a Republican Senator Margaret Chase Smith (R., Me.), to head a District subcommittee. He also retained all members of the committee staff.

Senator McGrath has taken the lead in each of the past three years in launching the legislation that has given Washington daylight saving time.

He threw powerful support to the Washington home rule legislation that passed the Senate under the active sponsorship of Senator Kefauver and with backing by Senator Neely.

McGrath also played a leading role in winning Senate approval of the new District revenue law, including the sales tax. On this he collided with Senator Neely, who said he'd rather be caught stealing sheep than voting for the sales tax.

D. C. Psychiatrist Gets Grant for Ward Study

A $27,130 fund to a Washington psychiatrist for a psychiatric and sociological study of a mental hospital ward was among the research grants totalling $489,584 announced yesterday by the National Institute of Mental Health.

Also announced were grants totalling $2,554,556 for training personnel in psychiatry, neurology, clinical psychology, psychiatric nursing and psychiatric social work. Five of these, totalling $129,844, will go to District institutions.

The Washington psychiatrist is Dr. Alfred H. Stanton, research associate of the Washington School of Psychiatry. His grant will finance continuation of a study, begun about a year ago, to determine the effect of a mental ward patient's environment on his condition.

The environment, the effect of which is being studied, includes fellow patients, the staff of the institution and the manner in which the ward is operated. The study was originally estimated to take three years.

The five training grants announced for local institutions were: Catholic University, $84,002; Howard University, $23,362; American Psychological Association, $10,000; Washington School for Psychiatry, $6480, and St. Elizabeths Hospital, $6000.

Maryland grants included $30,056 to Johns Hopkins University, $6000 to Chestnut Lodge Sanitarium in Rockville and $5000 to the Sheppard and Enoch Pratt Hospital in Baltimore.

The University of Virginia in Charlottesville will receive $17,500 in training grants, while the Richmond Professional Institute of William and Mary College was awarded $8000.

Rent Increase Forms Available For Landlords

Forms which landlords must fill out to receive the slight rent increase allowable as result of the recent real estate tax boost are now available.

District Rent Control Administrator Robert F. Cogswell last night announced that landlords should apply for the forms at the local rent office, 1740 Massachusetts ave., nw.

He has estimated that the real estate tax increase from $2.00 to $2.15 per $100 valuation would permit them to charge a 1 per cent boost in their annual rent bill.

Club Caretaker's Drowning Ruled Accidental

Montgomery County Medical Examiner Frank J. Broaschart issued a certificate of accidental death by drowning yesterday in the case of Aloysius Guy, 40-year-old caretaker of the Sycamore Island Canoe Club, whose body was found Wednesday, eight days after it disappeared in the Potomac.

The body was discovered in some bushes at Lock No. 5, Brookmont, Md. Guy was rowing a telephone repairman to Sycamore Island near Glen Echo, Md., July 19, when the boat capsized, tossing him into the current. The repairman made it safely to shore.

10,000 Visit Chincoteague To See Pony Penning Carnival

Chincoteague, Va., July 28 (AP).—Chincoteague islanders today wrote off another Pony Penning day in a long series that has drawn thousands of outsiders to this Eastern Shore community each year.

A crowd officially estimated at between 10,000 and 12,000 was in attendance at the day-long show which climaxed the Chincoteague Volunteer Firemen's annual carnival.

The spectators stayed for the day-long program of pony sales, bronco-riding, pony races, boat races, coast guard crew drills, band concerts and additional pony races, and the usual carnival attractions tonight.

The pony penning actually started yesterday when horsemen combed the salt marshes and Assateague Island to round up the wild ponies for today's show. The ponies were herded across the narrow Assateague channel at low tide to Chincoteague and corraled along with number of ponies taken from Chincoteague Island.

Most of the ponies are owned by the Chincoteague volunteer fire company, since 1924 a corporation sponsoring the annual show. The exact origin of the ponies is not known but one story has it that the animals are descendants of Spanish horses which swam ashore from a wrecked ship in 1700.

The pony penning idea dates back to 1835 when a group of Chincoteague fishermen, in holiday mood and seeking a respite from their chores, sought to take some of the ponies to Chincoteague.

Physicist Doubts Russia Has Bomb: Says 'Don't Worry'

Melbourne, Australia, July 28 (U.P.).—Prof. Marcus Oliphant, British nuclear physicist who helped make the first atomic bomb, said today he does not think Russia has the bomb yet and that, even if she does, he would not worry too much.

"The point which is not sufficiently stressed is that one atom bomb does not arm a country automatically," he declared, "if the Russians are to be regarded as serious adversaries of the United States in terms of atomic bombs, they must have them by the score or hundreds. There is the biggest gap between one experiment with one atomic bomb and sufficient atomic bombs to conquer the world."

Green Calls Convention Of AFL for October 3

President William Green yesterday called the sixty-eighth convention of the AFL to meet at St. Paul, Minn., on October 3 to "formulate policies designed to win victories for labor, both on the political and economic field."

Green and AFL Secretary-Treasurer George Meany said in the formal convention call that "the fighting spirit of the workers has been aroused as never before" against the "enactment of vicious, reprehensible antilabor legislation."

Rebels Outsmart Philippine Forces

By Spencer Davis
Associated Press Writer

Manila, July 28 (AP).—The forces of a spreading Communist-directed rebellion are outmaneuvering the constabulary which the young Philippines republic sends to suppress them.

The answer is a superior intelligence system.

The fact is put bluntly in a recent government intelligence report on the Hukbalahaps, the guerillas of the war years, who now set the republic at defiance.

"In eight out of every ten encounters," this report says, "the Philippines constabulary has been outmaneuvered, surprised and embarrassed . . .

"If anything, the facts indicate just one thing—the Huks are possessed of a superior intelligence system."

The Huks are led by Luis Taruc, an avowed Communist. Normally they operate in four provinces of central Luzon, the main island, and two provinces south of Manila.

Now the Huks are striking into at least six other provinces on Luson. They have appeared as far north as remote Palanan, on the east coast, 220 miles northeast of Manila.

They have been striking into the jungles of Bataan. They have been found lately in the rich agricultural Province of Batangas, immediately south of Manila.

Agrarian troubles have been almost unknown in Batangas. But the Huks, who claim to speak for the peasants in demanding land reforms, are there anyway.

A high constabulary officer said the Huks are working on a new organization plan geared for swift expansion of the rebellion.

There are three major forces. One is combat. A second is a base force which furnishes the supplies, makes contact with the peasants, and locates mountain strongholds.

The third force concentrates on expanding the Huk movement. The members of the third force are recruiters and propagandists.

They are making great headway. A reliable informant estimates that 60 per cent of the 800,000 Filipinos in four provinces around Manila are cooperating with the Huks. The provinces are Bulacan, Pampanga, Nueva Ecija and Tarlac.

Taruc's army does not fight an open battle. It follows a hit and run strategy against the constabulary.

The estimated 10,000 armed men under Taruc operate in squadrons. The squadrons expand and contract, according to the amount of constabulary pressure.

South and central Luzon are divided into separate zones of operations. For example, "Commander Stalin," a pseudonym for Alexander Viernes, is in charge of eastern Nueva Ecija Province. It was here that Mrs. Aurora Quezon, wife of the Philippines' first President, and 11 others in her party, were ambushed and killed by Huks in April.

To the west, another outfit hits Pampagna Province, then runs into the jungles of Bataan.

To back up the three major forces, the Huks also have an expeditionary force.

This is composed of combat units, base experts and propagandists ready to enter provinces not yet affected by Huk violence. They form the advance guard to prepare the way for spreading rebellion.

German Art Show To Appear at Gallery

The National Gallery of Art yesterday announced that the Kunsthistorisches Museum Collection, now on view at Tate Gallery, London, will be on exhibition at the gallery in early November. Dates will be announced later.

David E. Finley, Gallery director, also revealed that Michelangelo's famed statue "David" has been returned to the Bargello Museum in Florence. It had been on exhibition here since January 20 and was seen by upward of 791,000 persons.

$20 Million Clinic Scheduled

Construction of a 20-million-dollar, 13-story National Institute of Health clinic building in Bethesda will begin early in September, it was announced yesterday by the Public Buildings Administration. Bids for the structure which will include a 500-bed hospital, will be opened August 23.

The new structure, biggest in the health center, will house laboratories of the National Institute of Mental Health, the National Cancer Institute and the National Institute of Dental Research.

The structure, measuring 779 by 358 feet, will be situated opposite the Naval medical center in Bethesda. It will be operated by the Public Health Service and the Federal Security Administration. The beginning of work on the building will swell to 80 million dollars the value of Federal construction in the Washington area.

Batory Captain, Crew Decorated by Poland

Warsaw, July 28 (AP).—Capt. Jan Cwiklinski of the Polish liner Batory has been awarded the Gold Cross of Merit for "outstanding devotion to duty" in opposing the seizure of Gerhart Eisler aboard his ship.

Forty-six members of Cwiklinski's crew also have been decorated.

The Gallup Poll

Many Expect Lower Prices Later in '49

By George Gallup
Director, American Institute of Public Opinion

Princeton, N. J., July 28.—Continued relief from the high cost of living is envisioned by most voters for the next few months at least.

A national survey by the American Institute of Public Opinion finds that the majority of voters think prices in general will be lower six months from now than they are at present.

This widespread belief is undoubtedly a factor in the current recession, although no one can estimate how extensive or important a factor it is. Probably there are families who are postponing certain purchases in the belief that by waiting, they can get a more favorable price.

The survey was an attempt to measure this one aspect of public psychology so far as the economic situation is concerned. Voters representing a true cross-section of the Nation were asked:

"Do you think that prices, in general, will be higher, lower, or about the same six months from now?"

Last December, when the same survey was conducted, only about one-third looked for lower prices.

The trend follows:

	Today	Mar. '49	Dec. '48
Higher	10%	9%	18%
Lower	51	51	33
About same	31	31	39
No opinion	8	9	10

The survey is not a forecast of economic trends, since the average voter has no expert knowledge that would qualify him for price forecasting. His beliefs and impressions about prices in the future, may turn out to be right or they may prove quite wrong.

Professional and business persons interviewed in today's survey show the widest belief that prices will go lower.

Here is the vote by occupation groups and union members:

White Col.	11	54	29	6
Farmers	6	51	36	7

Retailers Hit Excise Tax On Business

By John W. Ball
Post Reporter

Excise taxes are virtually wrecking industries subject to them, the American Retail Federation has announced after a Nation-wide survey.

The federation has written the White House such taxes are costing the Government more than they bring in.

Rowland Jones, jr., federation president, told newsmen increased production and consumption that would be brought about if excise taxes were removed would mean increased corporation and individual income taxes that would more than offset the loss.

"Employment has declined in industries burdened by excise taxes three to four times more than in other industries," Jones said.

"If industry in general was hit as hard as those industries, we would now have 10 to 12 million out of work."

Employment in all manufacturing industries has declined 8½ per cent and hours worked 11.4 per cent in the last year, Jones pointed out. But in industries subject to excise taxes the decline has ranged up to 58.2 per cent, he said.

A letter from Beardsley Ruml, member of the federation Executive Committee, to Clark M. Clifford, counsel to President Truman, was released. It advanced similar arguments for relief from the excises.

While Jones was making his report here, Vice President Barkley was telling the National Association of Credit Jewelers' convention at Chicago that Congress may repeal excise taxes this session.

He said President Truman is "as anxious to eliminate the war-time excise taxes as anyone."

Other news yesterday affecting the Nation's economy included:

1. Factory workers drew almost a dollar more a week in June than they did in May, the Bureau of Labor Statistics reported. Average weekly paychecks totaled $53.68 against only $52.86 in May. The end of the Ford strike helped.

2. Consumer income and consumer purchasing held up well in the second quarter of 1949, although businessmen were cutting down their buying, the Commerce Department reported. Price reductions helped buying in many lines. Auto sales helped keep consumer buying up.

3. Commerce revised the gross national production of 1948 a few billion dollars upward. New figures are a total of 262 billion, instead of 255 billion—the original estimate. Total pay to employes in 1948 was listed as 140 billion—13 billion above 1947. Total national income was raised to 226 billion.

4. Willys-Overland Motors, Inc., at Toledo, Ohio, announced some of its workers will go on a three-day week next week. Production has been on a four-day basis for several months.

5. Recession from postwar business peaks has been "orderly and for the most part beneficial," the Philadelphia Federal Reserve Bank reported.

The bank said the drop in employment and prices did not present a "pretty" picture, but that such declines are necessary corrections of distortions created by the war and the postwar period.

Department Store Sales Dip 11 Pct. in Nation

Department store sales during the week ended July 23 slumped 11 per cent under the same period of 1948 for the country as a whole.

This was by a slight margin the worst showing in several weeks. The heat wave was among the possible causes cited. For the period January-July 23, sales were only 5 per cent under the corresponding period of 1948.

Supply and demand sent lamb prices down 4 to 10 cents a pound and pork was generally reduced by 4 to 6 cents a pound in many local chain stores yesterday.

Retailers said more plentiful supplies and a hot-weather drop in meat eating appeared to be responsible, as well as what one described as "unreasonably high prices" of lamb. Spring lambs are now coming into the market, he added.

Beef and egg prices remained about the same, but chickens were generally more expensive.

However, some fresh fruits and vegetables were cheaper than last week, among them watermelons, peaches, apples, eggplant, cucumbers, carrots and potatoes.

Butter prices were not changed, but a Government announcement that the Grade A support price would be raised was expected to have an effect on the market.

Plums were featured as the most plentiful food this week by the production and marketing administration of the Department of Agriculture.

Georgia Officials Face State Probe Of Corruption

Atlanta, July 27 (AP).—Attorney General Eugene Cook said today legal action will be launched quickly on charges of corruption in Georgia's government.

Cook announced he would resume immediately an investigation into alleged graft.

Cook declared one of the cases involves "disposition of $255,000 worth of war surplus materials, some of which was illegally disposed of by a State official or officials."

The attorney general said confessions have been obtained."

A second case under investigation, Cook reported, is "a charge of an offer of a $10,000 bribe to litigants in a case now pending, involving persons doing business with the State and State and county officials."

Grocer Held in Bond On Lottery Charge

Municipal Court Judge Thomas D. Quinn yesterday ordered Benjamin Denniberg, 39, of 1336 Missouri ave. nw., held under $1000 bond on a charge of operating a lottery. The case was continued to August 4. Denniberg was arrested Wednesday in his grocery at 2827 Georgia ave. nw.

Choose Star-Kist Tuna for this recipe, you're sure to agree it's the finest you've ever tried! Star-Kist's milder flavor and finer texture make all tuna recipes taste better.

Buy Solid Pack or Chunk Style Grated ...Star-Kist quality is the same!

STAR-KIST TUNA TAMALE RING

2 cups cream style corn
1 cup yellow cornmeal
3 tablespoons chopped onion
4 tablespoons chopped green pepper
2 tablespoons salad oil
1 teaspoon salt
1 8-ounce can tomato sauce
2 eggs
¾ cup milk

Combine ingredients in order and turn into well-greased ring mold. Place in pan of hot water and bake in 325° oven 1 hour, or until done. Make 2 cups of well-seasoned white sauce (or heat 10½-ounce can cream of mushroom soup); add one 7-ounce can Star-Kist Fancy Solid Pack (or New Chunk Style Grated) Tuna. Unmold ring on plate. Fill center with hot tuna mixture. Serves 6 generously.

Senators Quiz John Maragon

Pearson's column accusing me of being a 5 percenter but not only being a 5 percenter I proceeded immediately to the office of Senator Karl Mundt of South Dakota (a member of the investigating subcommittee) and asked the Senator to read the charge contained in the column.

"I then requested of Senator Mundt that in view of the charge, I be heard by the committee as soon as possible.

"Today the committee received my testimony in executive session."

Maragon said he could not discuss what went on in the meeting.

When pressed for information, he remarked cryptically:

"Honest, there is nothing in it yet. There may be in a couple of weeks."

He declined to elaborate.

A reporter asked: "Mr. Maragon, are you a 5 percenter or a 50 percenter?

He replied: "I have never been a 5 percenter, certainly never a 50 percenter—or any other kind of a percenter."

In reply to another question, Maragon said his testimony before the committee "dealt with my own business affairs and no one else's."

Friend of Vaughan's

"Are you a good friend of General Vaughan's?" a newsman asked, referring to Maj. Gen. Harry Vaughan, the President's military aide.

He replied: "Undoubtedly General Vaughan has thousands of good friends. I am fortunate to be one of them."

Maragon refused to say whether Vaughan's name was mentioned at the secret meeting, at which Senator Hoye (D., N. C.) presided.

There have been demands in Congress that Vaughan be called in the investigation because of a remark he made recently he knows 300 persons in Washington engaged in contract operations.

Maragon, now in his late 40's was born on the island of Malta. He is said to have got his start in business as a bootblack in Kansas City, where President Truman first met him.

Several years ago Maragon was a familiar figure around the United States Capitol as a commercial representative for the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad. One of his tasks was to obtain tcikets for Congressmen.

Once Went to Greece

When Mr. Truman first became President, Maragon spent a good deal of time around the White House. He still goes there occasionally to see Maj. Gen. Harry Vaughan, the President's military aide.

But it is reported that he no longer has a pass to the White House or parking privileges there. Recently, according to his friends, he has been an agent selling perfume oils.

Once he went to Greece on a Government mission.

McGrath Agrees

Truman Will Take No Part In Va. Race

By The Associated Press

Both President Truman and Chairman J. Howard McGrath of the Democratic National Committee expressed hands-off stands yesterday in the Virginia gubernatorial race.

McGrath, however, did comment on release of one of his 1948 presidential campaign letters, made public by G. Alvin Massenburg, chairman of the Virginia Democratic Central Committee.

The letter, dated October 29, 1949, expressed McGrath's appreciation for "the great work you have done to promote victory for our nominees on November 2."

Massenburg said the letter was released as an answer to criticism of his role as central committee chairman.

He said one of his critics was Francis Pickens Miller, who is in the primary race with John S. Battle, Remmie L. Arnold and Horace H. Edwards.

The State central committee urged the election of Democrats to the Senate and House, but did not commit itself to either Truman or Thurmond in the presidential race.

McGrath told a reporter the letter was one of "five or six thousand" sent out by his office "to inspire last minute cooperation wherever we could get it."

"I was still hopeful we could get their cooperation," he added.

"I would make no comment," he said, "except for this letter—an evident preelection appeal for party support—being brought into the campaign. I think the date of the letter speaks for itself."

Mr. Truman was asked at his news conference if he has any preference among the four Virginia candidates for the Democratic nomination.

The President replied that he had no comment. Then he added that he never gets into State political fights.

McGrath said the Democratic National Committee is "keeping in its own back yard" in pursuing a policy of not interfering in State contests.

Four Days Remain For Dog Inoculations

You have only four more days to have your dog inoculated against rabies for free, the Health Department said last night.

Officials reminded dog owners of a city ordnance requiring that dogs be inoculated at least once a year. Penalty for noncompliance is a $300 fine.

A total of 1821 dogs were vaccinated Wednesday—the largest number since the antirabies campaign opened July 11.

Dutch Oppose Britain's Bid For Bigger Share of ERP Aid

Paris, July 28 (AP).—Delegates from Marshall Plan countries will hold an emergency meeting Friday to discuss Dutch opposition to Britain's boost in her estimated needs for American dollar aid.

At The Hague, a Netherlands government spokesman said increased aid to the British would endanger aid to other European countries.

Britain has notified the Organization for European Economic Cooperation (OEEC) that her export business slump would leave her with a dollar deficit of $1,518,000,000 in the fiscal year 1949-50.

This was 404 million dollars higher than her estimate of three months ago. The Dutch asked for the emergency meeting.

British treasury officials in London last night denied the estimate submitted to OEEC was a formal request for $1,518,000,000 in Marshall aid.

But they conceded they hoped the higher estimate would be used as a yardstick in gaining added funds for Britain when OEEC divides up the Marshall aid still to be appropriated by the United States Congress.

Pumping Station Bids Accepted

The City of Falls Church yesterday accepted bids on construction of a pumping station at Seven Corners, Fairfax County, a part of its million dollar water system expansion scheduled for completion this fall.

The low bid on a 200,000-gallon elevated-steel tank was that of the Pittsburgh Des Moines Steel Co., of Pittsburgh, $33,990.

The only bid submitted on the tank and station foundation was that of Whittington & Brown, District firm, which offered $10,937. A low bid of $1909 was turned in by Goulds Pumps, Inc., of Seneca Falls, N. Y., for pumping equipment. The bids must be approved by the city council.

Rep. Kearns Shaken Up As Car Bumps Taxi

Representative Carroll D. Kearns (R., Pa.) was shaken up yesterday morning when his car collided with a taxi as Representative Kearns was pulling away from the Mayflower Hotel. Kearns' office said the Congressman did not require hospital treatment.

Noel Dowling, 63, of Columbia University, New York City, a passenger in the taxi, was removed to Emergency Hospital with a possible fractured rib. The driver of the taxi, Alton L. Malone, 24, of 4120 Southern ave. se., was not injured.

West Coast House Members Favor District Home Rule

tion in government. Democracy depends on the sovereignty of the individual and the individual is not a sovereign if he can't vote."

Clinton D. McKinnon (D., Calif.)

"Basically speaking, we come here to legislate on national matters, not local. We should delegate that power to the people who know best how to use it—the District residents.

"Involved are, first, a basic concept of local government, the franchise, and, second, economy for Congressmen. Congressmen are too busy for local problems and sometimes they duck such measures, and hence they are not adequately considered."

4 Who Didn't Vote

Here are comments of the four House members who were in the Eightieth Congress but did not vote on the Auchincloss bill when it was up on the House floor:

Jack Z. Anderson (R., Calif.):

"Had I been here, I would undoubtedly have voted for it. I certainly expect to vote for it this time."

Chet Holifield (D., Calif.):

"I would vote for it. I've taken that position ever since I found out there was a great body of our citizens here who couldn't vote."

George P. Miller (D., Calif.): a member of the House District Committee this year:

"In principle, I'm for home rule. I believe the people of the District of Columbia are as capable as any in the Nation of governing themselves. If the bill meets the requirement of real home rule, I'll vote for it, and I think the Kefauver bill does."

Harry R. Sheppard (D., Calif.):

"I feel that all of the people of this Nation should have a right to the franchise as long as they comply with the laws that make the franchise operational. On this bill as on all bills, I am not committing myself in advance."

Two Who Split Votes

Two members of the present Congress last year split their two votes—one for and one against home rule. These are their comments yesterday:

Harris Ellsworth (R., Ore.):

"I'm going to have to leave it to the judgment of those I know are thoroughly informed on the subject. I can't pretend to be a student of it myself."

Ernest K. Bramblett R., Calif.):

"I would look at anything with an open mind, but the longer I'm here the more I see Washington as a Federal city which it seems to me should be left to the whole country to run."

Those members who voted for or against home rule when the Auchincloss bill was up on the House floor a year ago divide as follows, on the basis of their 1948 votes:

FCC Employes Testify in Trial Of Tokyo Rose

San Francisco, July 28 (U.P.)—The Government introduced in the treason trial of Mrs. Iva Toguri D'Aquino today the transcripts of "Toyko Rose" broadcasts she allegedly made to destroy morale of South Pacific troops.

The recordings were compiled by a Federal Communications Commission monitor, Gwendolyn Baptist, Mount Rainier, Md., for the War Department during the war.

Francis X. Green, Washington, D. C., employed by the FCC monitoring station at Silver Hill, Md., during the war, testified.

Radio License Bar To 'Reds' Challenged

By John W. Ball
Post Reporter

Three men yesterday challenged the right of the Coast Guard to refuse them licenses as merchant marine radio operators on the grounds of membership in the Communist Party.

They are Earl Gove, jr., of Bristol, Vt., and George W. Sayre and Leonard Lazar of New York City. All three were recently denied licenses, and had asked the Coast Guard Loyalty Board for a hearing.

Gove frankly admitted membership in the Communist Party. But, he said, "I unequivocally deny any charge that I am or have been in any way disloyal or subversive." He declared that the Bill of Rights gave him the right to belong to any organization he chooses, and told the board that any questions on the subject "are irrelevant to the issue."

Boasting that he can trace his family tree back to the Plymouth Plantation in 1640, Gove declared that he plans to fight for his "freedom of association, freedom of speech and freedom to peaceably assembly that my forebears fought for."

Sayre went Gove one better, saying his family came to America in 1634. He admitted that he once was a member of the Communist Party, but spiritedly declared that he quit 11 years ago.

He said his joining was "an honest mistake." He declared "I am and always have been loyal to my country and have never done anything to hurt it."

He testified that in 11 years he worked up to "the best job I ever had, paying $115 to $130 a week," only to lose it suddenly when the Coast Guard refused his license.

Lazar, a one-generation American, refused to say whether he was a Communist, declaring that that "is not a proper subject for inquiry here." He admitted, however, that he was "the Lazar" recently named by The Daily Worker, Communist paper, as a member of a committee formed for the defense of Communist organizers now on trial in New York City.

Lazar said the Coast Guard board could consider only his fitness and aptitude as a radio operator, and had no business inquiring into his politics.

The applicants were represented by Victor Rabinowitz and Belle Seligman, New York attorneys. Rabinowitz frankly stated that they were laying the groundwork for an appeal to the courts over the board's ruling.

"The action of the Coast Guard," Rabinowitz said, "is the first instance in history in which Government licenses for private employment have been denied on so-called loyalty grounds."

"The Coast Guard board is made up of Comdr. C. H. Broach, Lieut. Comdr. W. B. Durham, Lieut. Comdr. J. H. Holm, V. E. Howard and K. Harrison.

Court Upholds Loyalty Tests

has no right to set aside the Federal Loyalty Board's findings, which resulted in Miss Barkley's dismissal.

"I have already found the President's Loyalty Board order is valid and constitutional. That is the only question before me in this case today," Judge Holtzoff stated.

He described as "unusual" several procedures in her case, such as the fact that "evidence" against her was not revealed to her at the time of the hearings and that it was supplied by "anonymous" persons.

He emphasized, however, that the loyalty hearing was not a trial but an administrative procedure and that the Government does not violate the Constitution by dismissing an employe.

Miss Bailey, who lives at 4936 Butterworth pl. nw., was ordered dismissed February 11 on grounds of questionable loyalty. She denied Communist Party membership or affiliation and contended that evidence never had been produced showing she was disloyal.

Her lawyer, Milton B. Freeman, said he will take the case to the United States Court of Appeals.

Queuille Stops Right Revolt In Cabinet

Paris, July 28 (U.P.).—Premier Henri Queuille today called a right-wing "revolt" in cabinet ranks, apparently assuring his regime at least three more months.

At an emergency cabinet session today, the small, quiet premier:

1. Persuaded four right-wing officials to withdraw resignations that would have wrecked the 10-month-old coalition cabinet.

2. Worked out a compromise settlement of the touchy vacation bonus issue, which inspired the revolt.

The National Assembly is scheduled to adjourn Friday until October, and there was little likelihood of a new cabinet crisis during the recess.

The right-left conflict exploded last weekend, when Socialist Labor Minister Daniel Mayer announce a $20 vacation bonus to social security workers.

The compromise settlement provided the extra pay should be balanced out by reductions in pensions.

Queuille also committed the government to resist demands for vacation bonuses from other workers.

No 'Stop' Sign To Her Love, Mrs. Beck Says

New York, July 28 (AP).—Rotund Martha Beck, alleged Lonely Hearts slayer, today flatly refused to give her reaction to "love-making" with her defendent, Raymond Fernandez.

Her counsel, Herbert E. Rosenberg, pressed the question.

Mr. Rosenberg," she replied, "that is something that took place because we loved each other and I considered it absolutely sacred. Unless I am compelled, I will refuse to answer. You referred to the love making as abnormal, but for the love I had for Fernandez nothing is abnormal."

Rosenberg appealed to Supreme Court Justice Ferdinand Pecora to make her reply, but the Court said "I won't compel your witness to answer the question."

Mrs. Beck and Fernandez are on trial on a charge of first degree murder in the bludgeon-strangulation slaying last January 4 of Mrs. Janet Fay, 66, Albany, N. Y., widow.

Hypnosis Cures Victim Of Amnesia

New Rochelle, N. Y., July 22 (U.P.).—A 29-year-old housewife, the first 20 years of her life blacked out by amnesia, recalled with joy and tears her girlhood today after a psychiatrist helped lift the curtain over her memory by means of hypnosis.

Mrs. Emily Norton, who had thought she was an orphan, discovered that her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Stanley Kobylanski, four brothers and a sister are living in Braddock, Pa.

There was a gala reunion today with two of the brothers. They found the girl they had given up for dead after her disappearance in 1940 was a happily-married mother of two children.

Bewildered but equally happy was John A. Norton, a waiter, who had shown only love and sympathy for a wife who could remember none of her past and whose headaches and dizziness brought her great worry.

A few weeks ago she went to Dr. Ralph L. Harvey for a mastoid operation. Dr. Harvey performed the operation but told her the real trouble was mental and induced her to consult a psychiatrist, Dr. Nathaniel Selby.

She told Selby the last day she could recall was in 1942 when she found herself walking, dazedly, along a highway near Latrobe, Pa., unable to remember her name or her home.

Dr. Selby went over the Pennsylvania towns until he reached "Braddock," which struck a response with Mrs. Norton. He got in touch with authorities there and learned that an Emily Kobylanski had disappeared in 1940.

Dr. Selby hypnotized Mrs. Norton and began to talk with her about her family in Braddock. She remembered persons and events with ease. Then the psychiatrist commanded her to retain that memory and broke the hypnotic spell. It worked.

Mrs. Norton said she and her husband would go to Braddock in the next few days for a reunion.

Yale Man Kidnaps Estranged Wife And Boy Friend

North Guilford, Conn., July 28 (U.P.).—With his mother-in-law in hot pursuit, Gale man John Kelleher, 32, was cornered after kidnaping his estranged wife and her boy friend at gunpoint, police said today.

The attractive 25-year-old brunette wife said her husband, jealous, forced her and Robert Duncan, 28, New Haven, into an automobile last night after a scuffle during which he pistol-whipped her escort.

Still holding the gun on them, Kelleher drove to nearby New Haven, and dumped Duncan onto a street. He was injured only slightly, she said. Kelleher, a war veteran studying at Yale, was cornered by police in six squad cars.

The Kellehers separated more than a year ago.

Impaled Race Driver 'Holding His Own'

Yakima, Wash., July 28 (AP).—A race driver who was impaled on a broken fence railing Sunday was reported "holding his own" and possibly gaining today.

The man is Allen R. Hobson of Cornelius, Ore. Part of a lung was torn away and four ribs were fractured by the timber. It pierced his left side and had to be sawed off on both sides of his body.

On the Town

By Georganne Williamson

"YOU'VE got to be fast," says Sammy Ferro, summer musical attraction at Glen Echo, "to make a trio sound like a whole orchestra. Sometimes—in one piece of music—I start on the trombone, go to the drums, and end up on the vibraphone. Switching around like that lends color and fills out the orchestration."

FERRO

On greeting me he said I'd have to pardon his weakened state, so I asked if it had resulted from all his gymnastics. "It's not that, so much—but I have a lot of things to keep up with," he explained.

That would be inevitable for the only man in the local union who has three regular shows daily. From 7:15 to 8 each night his trio has its own program on WTTG called "The Game Room." Also, they're the staff orchestra for the television station, and stand by for about three hours a day.

From 9 to midnight, his 7-piece orchestra plays for dancing at Glen Echo. And after that they proceed to the Golden Key Club, where the trio finishes their stint from 2:30 to 4:30 a. m.

Asked if he followed Benjamin Franklin's formula for doing without sleep, he disclaimed any acquaintance with the gentleman. "I do that which matters to me, and I have to have time for my softball team" (the ball team of Musician's Local 161).

With this, the little guy with a necktie of racing hobby horses reminisced about his team's latest scores. It won the championship last year and is sure of winning again this year. Softball practice sessions twice a week are a "must" for Sammy.

Sammy as a musician is something of a wonder. He was a "mean" drummer in elementary school. Hearing a trombonist at a high school graduation a few years later he decided that was for him. Without instructions, he mastered these two instruments, the vibraphone, bull fiddle, and his own voice. The only instrument he was taught, the piano, he doesn't play now. But he says it was invaluable for reading notes understanding harmony.

ABC Action Upheld Against Restaurant

The District Commissioners yesterday upheld a recent Alcoholic Beverage Control Board action revoking the Class C liquor license of Sabin's Restaurant, 1913 Nichols ave. se.

The ABC revoked the restaurant license on July 16 after a hearing at which it was charged the establishment sold liquor to intoxicated persons and permitted them to remain on the premises in violation of the law. The revocation becomes effective today.

House Votes Funds For Experimental Subs

The House yesterday approved by voice vote a bill to permit the Navy to spend an extra 11 million dollars on two experimental submarines. The bill goes to the Senate.

The Navy said the vessels, to embody all of the latest known designs, will cost 41 million dollars instead of 30 million dollars Congress originally approved because of "increased costs."

Welfare Department

The barrage laid down by spokesmen for assorted medical organizations in testimony on the Department of Welfare proposed in the President's Reorganization Plan was aimed in reality at the existing Federal Security Agency and at the idea of a national health insurance program. It had little relevance to the subject before the Senate Executive Expenditures Committee, to which the reorganization plan had been referred, and its extravagance was so great as to make it seem not quite rational.

It appears that the physicians, surgeons and dentists—at least those representing the official professional bodies—don't want a Department of Welfare because it would enhance the prestige and elevate to Cabinet status the only existing Government agency which can provide the machinery to operate the Administration's health insurance program. What they do want is a separate Department of Health; and they insist that this be administered by a doctor. The benefits of such an arrangement are much more obvious from the point of view of the medical associations than from the point of view of the public.

It is hard to see what special qualifications for administration are conferred on a man by interneship in a hospital and medical practice. This kind of training qualifies him admirably to diagnose and treat the physical ills of individuals; it does not give him any special fitness for dealing with the social ills of a Nation. In our view, health is not an isolated national problem, but is closely related to education and social security. These problems can best be dealt with on an integrated basis. And the head of the department dealing with them, whether in background a lawyer, doctor, or merchant chief, ought to be a man distinguished for his familiarity with and understanding of the cancerous social as well as physical conditions threatening the health of the American people.

Counterattack

All the admiration of which we are capable in such weather goes out to Senator John Foster Dulles, who under the archaic system of appointments by seniority, has become a member of the District of Columbia Committee. This, no doubt, is something of a break for the District, which, God knows, has need of one occasionally; but it is a tough one for Senator Dulles.

Senator Dulles' specialty, as you know, is foreign affairs. It is probably safe to say that nobody in the Senate is more at home with a demarche or a detente and all that sort of thing than Senator Dulles. All the same, if he wants to get on the Foreign Relations Committee, he will have to stick around and work his way up, just like Mr. Connally or Mr. Vandenberg.

That, however, is not why we feel sorry for Mr. Dulles. The kind of problems that a foreign relations committeeman must wrestle with in these days—the cold war, the implementation of the Atlantic Pact, the British dollar crisis, the Spanish problem, the Chinese catastrophe, the Cominform, and all that sort of thing—are formidable enough, but probably not beyond the power of inspired statesmanship to solve.

But as a member of the District Committee Mr. Dulles will have even more rugged problems to face, and with characteristic courage he is ready to take them on. Indeed, the problems that Mr. Dulles has staked off for personal and particular attention have given his courage almost the appearance of bravado. He has promised to engage in a war of extermination against the Washington starlings.

Now a good many men, quite as big and, in their way, quite as brave as Mr. Dulles, have said the same thing, and some have actually attempted to back up their words with deeds. But when all the excitement was over, after all the shooting of blank cartridges, all the hooting of mechanical owls, all the squirting of high-powered hoses, all the fumigations of ledges and cornices, the starlings were more numerous and more powerfully intrenched than ever in high places.

It is true, as Mr. Dulles says, that the starlings are for the most part unassimilable foreigners who show a profound contempt for the American way of life. But it is also true that they have managed to infiltrate themselves almost everywhere, even into many departments of the Government. Their power is said to be enormous; in the breeding season they invade the suburbs and preempt the lodging of native birds of various species. They have proved more than a match for the once ubiquitous English sparrows. They have requisitioned, without compensation, the fruit and grain harvests of farmers. In the autumn they converge on the city for great mass demonstrations that the police have found themselves helpless to control.

So if Senator Dulles really puts an end to the starling menace, the business of foiling the machinations of the Kremlin and its emissaries should be duck soup for him, as the saying goes.

Acheson's Plea

"All men desire peace," said Thomas a Kempis, "but few men desire to pay the price of peace." Some of us are apt to hide back of phony arguments in order to avoid facing this obligation. For instance, there is the Taft argument that an armed alliance would inaugurate an "arms race." How can you have an arms race with Soviet Russia when that country already is armed to the teeth? Soviet territory contains the greatest standing army the world has ever known, with five million men located either in satellite Europe or on the border ready for a pounce upon western Europe. Just as sinister is the spectacle of the entire Russian (and satellite) people organized in para-military formations called the Dosarm. The whole purpose of any arms program is to balance this bristling power in western Europe—to produce a military posture that, in Mr. Acheson's words to the House Foreign Affairs Committee, would "make the gamble too hazardous to be tempting." As he put it, "The gangster mind likes to gamble only on sure things."

Secretary Acheson made out a good case for implementing the Atlantic Pact with arms consignments. Hitherto we have felt that supplies should await the setting up of the defense organization under the Atlantic Pact. Mr. Acheson insists that "there is clear evidence of accomplishment and intent on the part of the recipients to help themselves and each other." He did not give details, but said they will be furnished in subsequent testimony. Here is a subject on which the maximum light is needed in view of the absence of the promised integration of economic Europe under the Marshall Plan. Without some earnest of military unity and division of function in western Europe arms from America might as well be thrown into the Atlantic Ocean for all the good they would do in the common defense.

An arms program is not convincing outside the context of a policy and a strategical plan. Both policy and (it is said) plan have taken shape in respect of the Atlantic community. In Latin America, to be sure, there is also a policy, the "one for all and all for one" Rio compact. But the Rio treaty still has to be ratified by, among others, Argentina. There is every reason to delay arms action in this respect until all the ratifications are in. And, though MAP would furnish only contract authority for Latin arms purchases, we see no strategic purpose in arms trading with Latin America even in the event of ratification. Here, again, the principle of division of function arises. No armed attack upon Latin America is foreseeable, as it is upon western Europe, and to encourage some of the governments to purchase American armaments would be to invite repression and tyranny. It is among the neighbors in the Americas that we can see the prospect of an arms race under MAP. If one country is allowed to buy arms, its neighbor must follow suit; and our great purpose of spurring reconstruction and peace in the Americas might thereby be frustrated.

In Asia this country has no policy, let alone any strategical plan. To be sure, a policy is in the making, but it will be time enough to give the President discretion in the matter of arms when a policy has been hammered out. We can see, for example, reason in letting a newly constituted United States of Indonesia buy arms when the Indonesians and the Dutch, with our help, have come to agreement. In that event the American security would be augmented by the United States doing all it can to develop the authority of the new federated governments. But such agreement is not yet in sight, and it is for this reason that we think the program needs to be split up, with first emphasis put upon the firm establishment of the North Atlantic defense organization and its munitioning.

Mr. Acheson, however, was vigorous and compelling, particularly in his insistence that "the central direction" of MAP will be "exercised by the Department of State." This is a civilian project, the more so because it deals in arms, and any move to reduce civilian authority, and set up a military opposite of ECA, should be resisted by everybody who has at heart the principle of civilian supremacy in the conduct of foreign affairs.

Unions And The Law

Thurman Arnold, former head of the antitrust division of the Department of Justice, urges extension of the antitrust laws to unions that attempt to restrain trade, control production, or fix prices. The three-day week prevailing at present in the bituminous coal mines, by order of John L. Lewis, is an outstanding example of the kind of restrictive arrangement that, if initiated by employers, would subject them to prosecution for violation of the antitrust laws. Moreover, with the tacit connivance of employers, union restrictions on output might be made the basis of a collusive combination of a highly oppressive nature that existing laws are inadequate to deal with.

While the need for protective action is evident, the remedy is far from clear. Mr. Arnold suggests that the Clayton Act ought to be amended to restrict unions to designated "legitimate" activities, and to outlaw certain specified practics, such as "make-work" systems and restrictions on production. The problem, however, would not be solved by such means. For the real difficulty is where to draw the line between union practices that unduly restrain production or arrest progress and practices that may be justified even though their incidental effect may be to raise prices somewhat or reduce output. Contracts—good and bad—limiting the working hour and working week, for example, reduce output. Where is the line to be drawn between the so-called legitimate and the illegitimate in such cases? A three-day working week is obviously intended to put a curb on production. But should a four-day working week be outlawed, or a six- or five-hour working day? Mr. Arnold admits that it is extremely difficult to spell out the difference between the permissible and the illegitimate and says that the courts would probably have to make the final decisions. That is an unalluring prospect, since few judges have the training and experience required to render sound opinions on matters of this kind.

Frankly we do not know the answer to the questions raised by Mr. Arnold, although we agree that some means must be found to curb unions that use their power to fasten monopoly on the country. In case of industries suffering from excess productive capacity, forced abandonment of restrictions on output may create demoralization, and it maybe wiser to resort to some form of regulated production and control instead of encouraging cutthroat competition. But in such cases, the restraint imposed should be defined by law and the industry subjected to regulation in the public interest.

ECA Tangle

The parliamentary tangle that resulted in recommittal of the ECA appropriation bill will no doubt create dismay and confusion in participating countries. These countries will be hampered in their planning by uncertainty as to the amount of funds to be placed at their disposal during the present fiscal year. Pending action by Congress on a revamped appropriation bill, the ECA, it is expected, will be able to carry on by relying on another emergency resolution already on its way to passage, authorizing agencies for which no regular provision has yet been made to spend funds at the rate provided for under the corresponding appropriations for 1949 or budget estimates for 1950—whichever is smaller. The ECA is already operating under a resolution of this kind made necessary by the appropriations logjam in the Senate. While the delay caused by sending the ECA appropriation bill back to the Senate is embarrassing to the Administration, its chances of ultimate passage are not jeopardized by this action. For the Senate debate was concerned only with technical rules, as Vice President Barkley stated, and not with the merits of the aid program.

As a matter of fact, the outlook for approval of an appropriation bill that would be much more acceptable to participating countries has, in our opinion, been improved by what has happened. For the debate was precipitated by Majority Leader Lucas, who raised a point of order against the McClellan amendment to the House appropriation bill on the ground that it was legislation carried in an appropriation bill. The amendment in question would in effect require the ECA to dump surplus American agricultural products on ECA countries. As we recently stated, this would not only retard European recovery by forcing those countries to take such surplus products, instead of goods that might be more essential for their purposes, but it would play into the hands of Communists who have asserted all along that the ECA was not intended to aid Europeans but to provide relief for American producers.

Senator Lucas' effort to eliminate this destructive amendment by raising a point of order was, therefore, made in a good cause, although Senator McClellan succeeded in outmaneuvering him and having the bill returned in its entirety to the Appropriations Committee. Of course, the committee may decide to put back in the bill all the legislative changes that have been stripped from it by the Senate's action, if Senator McKellar and Senator McClellan have their way. But such bull-headed tactics would, we believe, stiffen opposition to these mischievous proposals and it is hoped that saner counsel will prevail.

In any case, the practice of incorporating legislation in appropriations bills, regardless of the merits of such amendments, is thoroughly unsound. As Senator Lucas said, in reference to the McClellan amendment, if the Appropriations Committee can "write this kind of legislation into an appropriation bill . . . other types of legislation will be written into it, and the Appropriations Committee will be making all the legislation for the Senate of the United States."

THE WALL

Godfrey Bello was a quiet fellow.
Unlike Jack Horner,
He preferred his corner
Well out of the public eye.
He'd never put in his thumb or brag of a plum,
Even if it were superior.
Psychology save us!
His complex was quite inferior.
Poor Bello deeply feared
The world's crude jest and shout.
He built a wall around his ego
To keep intruders out.
Year on year he kept apart
Behind his barricade;
And no one came to share his life
Or admire the things he did.
Bello solved deep problems;
Dwelt long in abstract thought;
And in time's long course,
Evolved a mighty theory
That explained the universe.
But he found his triumph empty.
Said he, "This victory I must share".
The wall echoed softly, "Victory?
Bello, who will hear or care?"

Welfare Department

It is imperative that Americans be alerted to the dangerous implications of the President's Reorganization Plan No. 1.

The President's plan seeks to give Cabinet status to the Federal Security Administration. It would establish a department of welfare which would assume all the functions and duties of the present Federal Security Agency. The Federal Security Administrator would become acting secretary of welfare until the President made a permanent appointment.

The plan states that the Hoover Commission "recommended the creation of a department to administer the social security and education functions of the Federal Government." The President's plan recommends far more, however. It states, "This new department will perform the functions and conduct the programs now administered by the Federal Security Agency."

The American Medical Association has, since 1884, advocated the establishment of a Federal department of health headed by a secretary who is a physician.

We believe the Nation's health is important enough to justify such a department. A physician could best administer the department, in our opinion. We believe, furthermore, that health should not be subservient to other department interests within a single executive body.

One of our principal objections, however, is that in view of the announced stand of the Federal Security Agency on compulsory health insurance, giving this bureau Cabinet status would only implement the aspirations of those who seek to make America over in the pattern of the bankrupt welfare state.

The President's Reorganization Plan No. 1—lumping together as it does health, education, social security and welfare activities in a single department administered by a layman—does not meet the Nation's health needs. In as much as this reorganization plan automatically takes effect if the House of Representatives or the Senate does not take majority action against it before August 19, the only answer is prompt rejection by the means at hand.

Home Rule Bottleneck

Weeks have elapsed since the Senate passed the Kefauver bill, but the measure is still languishing in the Harris subcommittee of the House. Mr. Harris talks of expedition, but he artfully practices delay. At the present rate, the home rule bill will remain bottled up in his subcommittee when the session ends.

That four members of the subcommittee can hold up this bill indefinitely is, I submit, a glaring example of minority rule in Congress. Is it not preposterous that four Congressmen, whose home towns have a combined population of less than 40,000 people, can deny local suffrage to a city with 900,000 inhabitants?

Delayed Pay

This is just another complaint from a tired over-burdened teacher. Can anyone explain why the District summer school teachers cannot be told when they are going to be paid? We are employed and there is never any knowledge of a definite pay date. Naturally we are always eventually paid but it is like someone doing us a great favor and saying, "Surprise! Surprise!"

"Destroyers Of Sleep"

Thank you for your July 23 editorial on "Destroyers of Sleep."

Midnight and early morning reveling is not confined to organizations and conventions. All over the city we have smaller units of disturbers of the peace, which serve as centers of noise that keep whole neighborhoods awake. These are nothing more than "parties" in private homes, but they are carried so far into the morning hours, and are conducted in such a boisterous fashion, that they constitute a trespass upon the rights of other residents.

Then there are the radio hounds who always share their programs with every one else, the whole length of the block. There is also the increasing nuisance of loud radios in automobiles driving through our streets very late at night, or drawing up under our windows to park and "sit out" the rest of a program.

There are existing laws that cover these impositions, but the laws are not enforced.

"Thomas And Barden"

In your editorial of July 21, "Thomas and Barden," you still avoid the real issue; shall Catholic Americans, who comprise 20 per cent of the population, pay their full 20 per cent of the public education bill, and yet be denied any portion of it in educating 2,500,000 children with an annual saving to their fellow-taxpayers of over half a billion dollars?

And if approximately 90 per cent of the time is spent on such nonreligious subjects as reading, writing and arithmetic, it just doesn't sound like good figuring to say that in every dollar given to educate children in such schools there is a supporting of religion and a union of church and state.

Your editorial calls the emphasizing of points like this "petty bickering, pin-point arguments . . ." It certainly is neither petty nor pin-point to resent being cheated out of one's rights as American citizens by the sonorous repetition of an arbitrarily conceived theory of separation of church and state.

Everybody knows that the vast majority of Catholic parents will continue to send their children to parochial schools whether justice is denied them or not. Therefore to insist on excluding all nonpublic school children from the benefits of a Federal education will simply hurt millions of American children and penalize millions of conscientious American citizens.

Basic Defense Plan

The July 23 communication from Stuart B. Barber states a problem but does not offer a solution. It is of little concern to most of us which arm is dominant in warfare. "Dominant" is merely a label applied after someone has made certain choices from the process level. No two persons' choices from any process are identical.

When Mr. Barber says: "the services cannot write a sound war plan until they are given an objective and framework from above," he makes a statement worthy of some thought. It was my impression that such an objective and framework had been provided by Mr. Truman when he announced that our purpose in helping Greece and Turkey was to contain "totalitarianism" throughout the world. Mr. Barber raises the question, "to what extent shall we combat those ideas by bombs, and to what extent by political means first." It is always prudent, however, to have a few bombs in the background, just in case the enemy should become frustrated by our successful political campaign, and start moving in our general direction.

When Mr. Barber starts talking about how far we should limit the potential destructiveness of our weapons, and guide them into channels of greatest political advantage, he becomes somewhat obscure. I cannot blame the National Security Council for not being able to write a basic war policy on such abstractions. The only way I know of guiding a weapon into a channel of greatest political advantage, would be to use it to assassinate my political opponent. This is generally frowned upon, both in national and international circles. It would do little good, in my opinion, to drop an atom bomb on the Kremlin while they are in session, because, over night, we should find another Politburo setting itself up somewhere in Siberia where they would be more difficult to reach. As for limiting the potential destructiveness of any weapon, I am surprised to know that this has ever been considered, especially in military circles. It is true that chemical warfare was taboo in the last war, but we got around that nicely with flamethrowers, and even if we taboo such things as germ warfare, the deadly effects of radioactivity will more than justify such limitation.

The one point which Mr. Barber avoids when he says "each service tries to keep alive a full set of weapons adequate for all possible tasks because the exact tasks to be accomplished have not been defined" is, that in carrying out these policies each service is faced with the enemy of obsolescence. This enemy, with his side-kick entropy, is more wearing on the "impatient advocates of economy and efficiency" than many other factors in the cat and mouse game of national defense. Apparently, Mr. Barber believes that if we had "a well constructed, positive plan for using the total resources, political as well as military, of the United States to accomplish its basic objectives in war," such "important advocates" would be stymied, once and for all. Without a plan, the "impatient advocates of economy and efficiency" may well get out of hand. And why can't such a plan be perfected? Because the Navy's "surface-minded leaders" are unwilling to admit that the dominant force in war must be aviation."

It is the Russian purpose to bleed us white in our efforts at containment by military means; our arming of Europe means little in the way of threat to her, for anything like an adequate force to contain the Red army, once it decided to move, would bankrupt us. Our greatest defensive weapon is our continued economic well-being, despite Russia's fervent hopes for a collapse. Let us continue to experiment, but let us not adopt any hard and fast plan and proceed to implement it, when we know nothing about the character of the next war as yet. Let us contain totalitarianism, by all means at hand, but not strangle ourselves in the effort.

Washington Calling

By Marquis Childs

Virginia Election

IN NEARBY Virginia they are winding up the fiercest political battle seen in that ordinarily placid State in many a year. The machine of Senator Harry F. Byrd is being seriously challenged in the race for Governor to be decided at Tuesday's primary.

Byrd and the politicians operating one of the most tightly controlled organizations in the country have raised the cry of "outside interference" by the trade unions. They would like to have the voters believe the contest is a kind of trial run for 1950 when the issue of organized labor in politics will be fought out on a much bigger field.

But the ardent champions of Francis Pickens Miller, the anti-Byrd contender, dispute this loudly. They insist that the real issue is whether Virginians are to participate in free elections or whether State and national offices are to be perpetually filled by the designation of insiders who in each county manage the courthouse crowd.

THE MILLER strategy is to try to get out the largest possible vote. As of today the Miller forces believe the vote will be between 330,000 and 350,000—out of a population of more than three million. On that basis they are surprisingly optimistic about the outcome.

Besides Byrd's candidate, James S. Battle, two others are in the race. They are Remmie L. Arnold, a pen manufacturer, and Horace H. Edwards, who was for eight years State Democratic chairman.

Arnold accused Byrd of sending an intermediary to him to offer him an important office if he would get out. Byrd issued an indignant denial. Both Arnold and Edwards seem likely to pull votes away from Battle.

This question of who votes in the Southern poll tax States was hotly debated in the House before a coalition of Republicans and Northern Democrats. Ultimately, a measure outlawing the poll tax as a prerequisite for voting in national elections was passed by a vote of 273 to 116. A great deal of oratory, most of it thickly clotted with politics, came from both sides.

Northern advocates of the bill compared the total vote in 1948 in the seven poll-tax States with the totals in industrial States in the North. The Southern total was 2,695,293, or 1,200,000 less than were cast in Illinois alone. Yet the seven Southern States sent 69 members to the House as compared with 26 from Illinois.

This ignores, of course, the fact that under the South's one-party system the primary and not the national election is the decisive contest. But it also conveniently overlooks the fact that the poll-tax requirement is only one—and perhaps one of the least serious—obstacles to voting in the South.

There is good reason to believe that Southern conservatives are all prepared, if by remote chance the Senate should also adopt the anti-poll-tax bill, to institute formidable State barriers that could not be broken down by Federal action. The most effective means is to require annual registration of all voters and that registration can in practice be made so difficult that only a select few are helped across the barrier.

VIRGINIA IS an interesting example. State Attorney General James L. Almond, jr., a former Congressman, has ruled that the State law forbids putting printed questions on the registration blank. The applicant is to be handed merely a blank sheet of paper and he must know what information he is supposed to put down.

The average citizen could be counted on to flunk that test. In practice, however, county registration boards are for the most part reported to have been helpful and considerate, instructing applicants in what to write down on the blank.

There has been an extraordinary increase in registration, particularly in certain areas where organized labor is strong and in Negro districts. The registered Negro vote in Richmond is said to have gone from less than 1000 to nearly 10,000 and the increase in the Fourth Congressional District is roughly the same.

In recent years machine after machine has gone down to defeat in State after State. The Byrd forces resent the word machine, preferring the politer term, organization. But whatever it is called, it has been highly effective over a long period and such tight control inevitably breeds the kind of jealousy, resentment and factionalism now evident in Virginia.

"Arming the World"

Your July 26 editorial on "Arming The World" is excellent and calls for high commendation from all who realize the great need for some consideration as to the future "solvency" (economic, military and political) of the U. S. A. Frankly, I was somewhat surprised to find you so outspokenly opposed to some of the maneuvers of the Administration "pundits"—in the light of the past. It just goes to prove that the American press has refused to surrender its "freedom of decision"—and that you still have the happy faculty of detecting a stupid situation, and the guts to point it out to the public.

Matter Of Fact

By Stewart Alsop

The Mess Is Not Hopeless

RANGOON, Burma.—Here, as elsewhere in Asia, the nationalist leaders who are now trying to govern Burma are rather like intelligent but neurotic adolescents, in their lack of experience of the hard realities of power and politics. And they are neurotic in their obsessive fear of losing their hard-won independence.

Yet because Burma's leaders are also highly intelligent, they are capable of learning. They are now learning some difficult lessons. It is this which makes it possible to say that the mess which is Burma today is not a hopeless mess.

THE FIRST lesson, which they have already learned, is that Communists are Communists. Like Indonesia's, Burma's nationalist government had originally a strong fellow-traveling coloration. Every possible effort was made to appease the Communists. When the Communists, nevertheless, took up arms against the government, in obedience to the Kremlin's Asian strategy, the fellow-traveling tinge began rapidly to fade, although it has not yet faded out entirely.

The second lesson which the Burmese leaders are learning is that they must have a settlement which the rebellious Karens. As long as the tough Karens are in revolt, Burma will remain a quivering jelly which the Chinese Communists will ultimately consume with ease. If the authority of the government is to be reestablished, the Karens must be transformed from the enemies of the government into its active allies.

The third lesson has been, for quite understandable reasons, the most difficult to learn. It is simply that without some help from the outside, the mess in Burma will never be cleared up, and the Communists will inherit the power which the British surrendered.

This lesson has been so difficult because the Burmese leaders react to anything that smacks of "intervention" as though they had been flicked with a whip in an open wound. They are obsessed with the fear that somehow the British, or even perhaps the Americans, will seize power in Burma. However unreasonable this fear may be, it is necessary to recognize its existence to understand not only what is going on here but elsewhere in Asia. "You've got to remember," remarked one astute American here, "that they're as scared of us as they are of the Communists."

This is still partly true, but it is a great deal less true than it was only a few months ago, when it was impossible to help the government of Burma simply because the government refused all help. Now, by way of contrast, the Burmese leaders are reluctantly considering the possibility of outside mediation in their dispute with the Karens, which is probably the only way a settlement with the Karens can be achieved. Moreover, they are nervously toying with a British Commonwealth offer of aid in the form of money and arms. They are inspecting the offer from every possible angle, to make sure that no imperialist strings are attached, but they have gone so far as to send Vice Premier Ne Win to London to talk things over. And finally, Premier Thakin Nu has made an open bid for American capital investment in Burma, which would have been unthinkable a few months ago.

THAKIN NU'S bid is hardly likely to find an eager response now, simply because any capitalist would be mad to invest a dollar in Burma today. Yet if only the mess can be cleared up in time, through a settlement with the Karens and help from the Commonwealth, there will be breathtaking opportunities for economic development in this rich country, with its huge unexploited coal and oil reserves and its great food surplus. With peace, capital investment, and technical assistance, a sudden, sharp rise in the standard of living of the people here is wholly predictable.

Thus a Burma with a political and economic structure sufficiently strong permanently to withstand the Communist drive south in Asia is at least possible. But it is no more than possible. It is based on a whole series of ifs—if a settlement with the Karens can be reached, if effective economic and military aid is forthcoming from the British Commonwealth, if the necessary capital and technical assistance comes from the United States, above all if there is time to clean up the mess before the Chinese Communist armies reach the borders of Burma.

There is still a chance here, and clearly the United States, working with the British Commonwealth, should do everything that can be done to increase the chance. But it is only necessary to add up the ifs to realize that in losing China we have risked losing not only Burma but the whole vast, fabulously rich, strategically vital region of Southeast Asia.

12½-Cent Fourth Round Hike Demanded by Steel Workers

New York, July 28 (AP).—The United Steel Workers of America, claiming that the steel industry was rolling up "staggering" profits, today demanded a fourth round increase of 12½ cents an hour.

Philip Murray, president of the CIO union, made the demand as part of a 30-cents-an-hour package. The steel workers also want, he said, 11.23 cents an hour for pensions and 6.27 cents for social insurance.

Murray said the steel industry was amassing profits of about a billion dollars a year and should grant the union's demand in the national interest.

He led off testimony before the three-man board that the President named to avert an imminent strike by the 900,000 steel workers last July 16.

Report Due by Sept. 1

The board must make its recommendations, which aren't binding on either side, to Mr. Truman by September 1—15 days before the union's new strike deadline. The union has eight days and the 64 steel companies an equal period to present their case.

Murray waxed emphatic in declaring that the steel industry has been "desperately anxious to conceal the economic facts" of the dispute.

"The industry," he said, "is amassing profits at the staggering rate approximating one billion dollars annually, after all taxes. This is a record high never approached before, even in the boom year of 1929."

The gray-haired union head said U. S. Steel spent 76 million dollars for "wear and exhaustion of its facilities" in the first half of 1949.

"But in 1948," he declared, "this same corporation spent 10 million dollars for the wear and exhaustion of its human beings.

'Disgraceful', He Declares

"That is a disgraceful and scandalous record for the industry to defend before this board."

Murray spoke scornfully, too, of high pensions paid to steel company executives.

"They are the fellows who say, 'It's fine for me to get, but to hell with the other guy'," he told the board.

Earlier, the fact-finders agreed to hear the union's pension demands although the steel companies contend that the reopening clause in their union contracts does not permit pensions to be brought up.

Chairman Carroll R. Daugherty said, however, that no recommendation would be made on the pension question if the board finds it cannot properly be raised at this time.

Daughter Asks Property of Mrs. Patterson

Mrs. Felicia Gizycka yesterday asked District Court for much of the personal property from the estate of her mother, the late Mrs. Eleanor Patterson, because she is the sole heir.

The beneficiaries of Mrs. Patterson's will have been unable to agree on the distribution of the property involved and the executors of the estate asked District Court for instructions on distribution two weeks ago.

Through her attorneys, Mrs. Gizycka filed an answer to their request and added her own request for additional instructions. The property involved is in Dower House in Prince Georges County, which was bequeathed to Mrs. Ann Bowie Smith; the residence at 15 Dupont Circle, left to the Red Cross, and goods at the Security Storage Co.

Included in the property, which Mrs. Gizycka seeks, is a $1200 chandelier, an antique rug, valued at $1400, three automobiles, an air conditioner, 5 tons of coal, numerous paintings and photographs and other household furnishings and furniture.

Mrs. Gizyckz also asked that the papers and documents which relate to her mother, herself or any member of the family and which are stored in 125 containers, be turned over to her.

After a long contest over the will of Mrs. Patterson, who was owner and publisher of the Washington Times-Herald, Mrs. Gizycka was awarded a tax-free settlement of $400,000, with the bulk of the money to be paid by the seven executives who inherited the newspaper.

Mine Operator Says UMW Directs U. S. Economy

A coal operator complained yesterday that the Government is letting the United Mine Workers direct the Nation's economy.

Justin Potter, Kentucky mine owner, told the Senate Banking Committee the union "can dominate the country if it is not stopped and that right now."

He cited as an example of the union's "monopolistic power" the present three-day work week which UMW chief John L. Lewis ordered for miners. He also contended that the UMW "by its threats, wields power" greater than that of the States.

"But the Government, so far, seems to sit idly by and let the mine union manage, both by direction and indirection, the economy of the greatest country on the face of the earth," he added.

The committee is looking into coal operations, the three-day week and the UMW's activities. The study was asked by Senator Robertson (D., Va.).

Potter, whose home is in Nashville, Tenn., is president of the Crescent Coal Co., at Central City, Ky.

He said the UMW "by written or spoken word can shut down one of the Nation's great industries, it can dictate how much coal the Nation can have and when it can have it . . . it can shut down industries because of lack of fuel, it can make the railroads take off trains and lay off workers."

Rolla D. Campbell of Huntington, W. Va., general counsel for the Island Creek Coal Co., West Virginia, said the situation "is obviously deplorable nad intolerable."

Josse V. Sullivan, of Charleston, W. Va., testified "the Communists are deeply interested in the activities of the miners in West Virginia and elsewhere."

Sullivan, secretary of the West Virginia Coal Association, said a pamphlet issued by the Communist Party of West Virginia munist Party of West Virginia "outlines certain demands" by Lewis, indicating the Communists possess advance information which the mine owners are unable to obtain.

More Durable Flags Sought by U. S. Bureau

A scientific search for materials that will provide more durable flags is being conducted by the Public Buildings Administration, which spends about $15,000 a year to keep the Star Spangled Banner waving over 1500 Government buildings.

W. E. Reynolds, Public Buildings Commissioner, has found that the average cotton-and-wool flag wears out in 27 days. So he has put researchers to work testing numerous materials and combinations, different types of stitching and the advantages of various plastic lacquers and chemical processes in the hope of developing banners which won't have to be replaced so often.

British Halt 4-Day Plunge Of Bond Prices

London, July 28 (AP).—Hints of government influence and a stream of money from small investors halted a four-day plunge of British government bond prices today.

Most securities plummeted to their lowest level in a decade when the London Stock Exchange opened in a wild flurry of trading. But at the close of business most securities showed only fractional losses and some of them were level with yesterday's closing prices.

The day's rally started at midmorning when investors moved in to look for bargains for small investments at the new low prices.

At noon a top-hatted government broker appeared and shares in government bonds showed signs of life.

There was no way of knowing whether the government broker bought for the government or for private investors, but his appearance in the exchange had a steadying effect.

Most dealers took it to mean the Labor government was pouring in money to stop the drop in securities prices.

The drop in securities began early in the week. Brokers said it was caused by a mass move to convert paper assets into cash and blamed it on the darkening dollar crisis.

World Bank Group to Go To Yugoslavia to Study Loan

A mission from the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development will go to Yugoslavia next month to investigate an application for a 50-million-dollar loan, it was announced yesterday.

It will study the country's economy in relation to the application and will examine projects to be financed by the loan. It will leave Washington the second week of August and remain in Yugoslavia for several weeks.

The Yugoslav government recently told the bank it wanted the money to finance agricultural mechanization, irrigation and drainage, development of mining and metallury, rehabilitation of the transportation system, improvements in forestry, and expansion of capacity of existing industries and establishment of new ones.

Those assigned to the investigation are A. S. G. Hoar, assistant loan director, who will head the mission; S. R. Cope, loan officer, and Martin M. Rosen, E. Harrison Clark and Samuel Lipkowitz, bank staff economists. Two or three technical consultants will go with them.

Lords Block Bill to Socialize Steel Industry

From Press Dispatches

London, July 28.—The House of Lords blocked today the Labor Government's bill to nationalize the British iron and steel industry next May and insured that the issue will be a bitterly contested feature of the next general election.

By a vote of 103 to 29, the Lords insisted on amendments they previously had approved, and which the House of Commons had rejected.

The effect is that nationalization cannot become effective before July, 1950.

Britain's largest railway union—460,000 strong—threatened tonight to strike within 21 days unless the government-owned railroads pay $2 a week more over wages ranging from $19 to $28.30 weekly.

Dr. Kinsey Named Pharmacist Head Of Public Health

Appointment of Dr. Raymond Kinsey to rank of pharmacist director of Public Health Service was announced last night by Federal Security Administrator Oscar R. Ewing.

He becomes the first pharmacist officer in Public Health Service history to attain the rank, equivalent to full colonel rank in the Army.

A native of Washington, D. C., Dr. Kinsey has been on the Health Service staff since 1914, after graduation with honors from the George Washington University College of Pharmacy.

Research School Seeks Freshly Pulled Teeth

A supply of freshly-pulled teeth—civilian or military—is being sought by the Army's Research and Graduate School for study of the value of various preparations in combatting dental decay. Army dentists have been ordered to send in the output of their extractions, and school authorities said they would be glad to get contributions from civilian dentists, too.

Political Realities Of FDR Annoyed Her, Widow Says

New York, July 28 (U.P.).—Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt revealed today she often was annoyed at her husband because he refrained from supporting causes in which he believed "because of political realities."

The wife of the late President Roosevelt, writing in McCall's magazine in the third installment of her memoirs, said she particularly wanted the President to support antilynching and antipoll tax bills in the 1930s.

"While I felt strongly on certain subjects, he (President Roosevelt) often refrained from supporting causes in which he believed because of political realities. There were times when this annoyed me very much."

Hope Given Up For Woman Soviet Seized

London, July 28 (U.P.)—A leading Foreign Office official said today that Britain now has little hope of tracing a 36-year-old British-born telephone operator reportedly arrested six months ago by the Soviet secret police.

Minister of State Hector McNeil told the House of Commons that Russian Foreign Minister Andrei Y. Vishinsky had rejected a formal protest over the seizure of May Peters on the ground that the former British Embassy employe was a Russian citizen.

Britain protests this contention, although admitting that the British-born woman carried a Russian passport.

McNeil said Miss Peters, "who had twice previously been subjected to visits by the Soviet police, disappeared on January 17 while returning to her flat from the embassy and has not been heard of since."

He quoted a letter from former British Ambassador to Moscow Sir Maurice Peterson, which said 'the facts show clearly that intimidation of the most direct kind was brought to bear against an employe of this embassy.

"When this proved abortive, Miss Peters was arrested without explanation or notice, either at the time or subsequently," Peterson's letter added. 'This case is only the latest of a series of incidents involving arbitrary interference with the staff, coupled with failure to notify me of the action taken or contemplated."

The Ambassador pointed out that two Russian telephoe noperators employed by the embassy previously had disappeared, apparently into secret police custody, and that "there had been other cases of intimidation of the embassy staff.'

One on the Aisle—

It Simply Isn't Marilyn Miller

By Richard L. Coe

AS A PIECE of Technicolored, musical merchandise, the Warner's "Look for the Silver Lining" is only that. As the biography of Marilyn Miller, it's a hoax.

If you're too young never to have seen Marilyn Miller, this will only make you wonder what all the shouting was about. It's not June Haver's fault that the girl she plays doesn't come to life on the screen; as a matter of fact, Marilyn's few movies ("Sunny," "Her Majesty, Love," to name most of them) never captured her rare nature on celluloid either.

But Marilyn was one of the great ones, just as, say, Ethel Merman and Mary Martin are in their own ways. The word "Sunny" fitted Marilyn to a T. The stage lighted up whenever she came on. There was a radiance and joy of life about her that was unique.

I feel extremely lucky to have seen her. I was a tyke of 7 when I saw my first musical comedy, from the second balcony of Gotham's New Amsterdam Theater. The show was "Sunny" and Marilyn came on on a white horse—into a circus setting while "the boys" sang the title song. Later she sang "Who." Clifton Webb, "Belvedere," was in it, too, dancing with Mary Hay.

Marilyn was generous with her talents. I later saw her play "Peter Pan" as a benefit for the building fund of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, and she entertained us choirboys afterward backstage, with Bishop Manning beaming his approval.

Some 10 years later I reached the fringes of her circle. The show was "As Thousands Cheer," and on its opening night she called to one of the chorus boys: "Will you take me out for supper?" She the star, he the minion, but it was the beginning of a romance that lasted 'til her death at 38 in 1936.

She'd been on the stage since she was 5, not 15 as the story states. She was allied with the great names of the period—Lee Shubert, who discovered her in London, Ziegfeld and Dillingham, who are not mentioned in this biography." Evidently the Warner lawyers also were unable to clear the title of "The Passing Shows," which brought her first into stardom. Her first billing was as "The Little Lump of Sugar," which gave her the nickname "Lumpy," though the picture doesn't tell you that, either.

Her later years were plagued by intense suffering from sinus, which you don't learn in the picture. One night, backstage at the Music Box, I saw her in such pain that it hardly seemed possible that the girl in the toy number of "As Thousands Cheer" was the same Marilyn a few minutes later. It was the sinus infection which finally killed her.

I go into this at length from affection and because I'd hate those of you who never saw her to think that the picture at the Warner begins to approximate her. It boils down, once more, to the cinematic unwisdom of attempting a biography which, for legal, copyright and personal reasons, shouldn't be tried in the first place.

The picture's one redeeming feature is the presence of Ray Bolger, as Jack Donahue, that costar of Marilyn's who was very special in his own way, not unlike Bolger in a sense, either—tall, gawky, yet immeasurably graceful. Apparently, too, Phoebe and Henry Ephron and Marian Spitzer, the script-writers, were legally unable to introduce Jack Pickford, Mary's brother and Marilyn's second husband, into their story, but Jack was a vital part of Marilyn's life. There's a brief scene with costar Will Rogers, but it's dragged in for gee-whiz-gosh effect, which, by the way, fizzles.

Gordon MacRae plays her first husband, singing "Time on My Hands" and the title song. Charlie Ruggles and Rosemary DeCamp play her father and mother in stock situations and even the excessively unfunny S. Z. Sakall has a small spot.

Average musical movie stuff, but decidedly not "the musical biography of Marilyn Miller."

Trash Mixed With Truth Robs 'Red Menace' of Its Urgency

THE MOST frightening aspect of "The Red Menace," at the Metropolitan, is that the activities of the Communists in this country seem to be luridly melodramatic and impossible. And yet the constant testimony of ex-Communists like Julian Wadleigh, whose own story is running Sundays in this newspaper, testifies that most of it is true.

The plotting of the overthrow of our Government, the exploitation of minorities, the discussion of the techniques of revolution, the callous use of any means to attain any end—all these would seem to be tremendous material for an important movie. They are all included in the new Republic film. But they are so botched in a melange of Marx and melodrama that the ultimate effect produced is one of disdain rather than of terror that such things are happening while these words are being written.

The responsibility for the failure of this film must ultimately rest with the man who produced it, Herbert J. Yates. Instead of making a penetrating study of this hideous cancer, he has supervised the making of a film which, at any other moment in history, would be completely absurd. Against the background of party activities he has set an impossible romance of a disillusioned former GI and a female agit-prop alien who comes to see that the American way is the best.

"Before the romance ends happily there are some good scenes which save this from being the worst picture of the year. Especially good is the one in which Shepherd Menken, as a young Jewish intellectual, refuses to disavow a poem about Karl Marx and admits his error in having joined the party.

Another is the one in which a priest tries to recall a wayward girl from being a sexual come-on for potential recruits. Finally, the montage of the indoctrination classes, in which the new members are taught the evils of democracy and the techniques of revolution, is quite good.

There is much that is pertinent and important in "The Red Menace"; there is too much that is trashy. Our final feeling is that no amount of good intention outweighs a bad movie.

"Look to ~~CROSLEY~~ for Plus Features"

Why!

HAVE TWO ENTERTAINMENT UNITS IN YOUR HOME WHEN . . .

~~CROSLEY~~

GIVES YOU BOTH FULL RANGE FM RADIO & TELEVISION IN ONE COMPACT UNIT . . . . . .

Pictured are a few of the stars now appearing on television and coming this fall

Compact is the word for this unit! It takes up so little of your precious space—yet gives you so much in return! You can hear your favorite radio program static-free because FM now broadcasts network shows simultaneously with AM—or you can watch your favorite star of television.

Senate Group Reports Bill to Boost Pay of Postal Employes $100

A bill to give the 500,000 postal employes a flat $100 pay boost and to abolish the first two postal grades was reported to the Senate yesterday by its Post Office and Civil Service Committee. Hourly employes would get a raise of 2½ per cent in it.

Action was delayed on the bill to adjust the salaries of the 850,000 classified workers. However, Senator Long (D., La.), the pay bill manager, promised its approval by early next week. Meantime, a study will be made to make certain all classes of classified workers are included in it.

The postal bill would fix $2850 as the minimum starting salary for clerks and carriers. It's likely that the measure will be further amended to direct the department to supply uniforms to all employes who are required to wear them.

On the House side, its Post Office and Civil Service Committee also debated pay-reclassification bills. No definite action was taken, but it was reported the committee was in an apparent agreement to approve bills to benefit both classified and postal workers.

The classified bill before the Senate committee is said to have been informally discussed. It would provide an average increase of $125 and raise the salary ceiling to $15,000, among other provisions.

The Senate committee also approved these bills: to give teachers, firemen and police in the Panama Canal Zone a $330 annual pay boost retroactive to July, 1948; to provide annual automatic promotions for part-time custodial employes in the postal service; to set up a research and development division in the Postoffice Department, and to provide promotions for the temporary employes in postoffice's mail equipment shop here. The House committee approved the bill to allow legislative employes until next January to come in under the Civil Service Retirement Act.

CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION must lay off about 400 additional employes in a cutback that will be felt throughout the Federal service.

The Senate upset its Appropriations Committee by refusing to go along on a $2,250,000 increase in Civil Service funds, which would have made the reductions unnecessary. The 14-million-dollar budget approved by the Senate is identical with that approved earlier by the House.

Senators Bridges (R., N. H.) and Ferguson (R., Mich) led the fight to sustain the House. Senator O'Mahoney (D., Wyo.) argued for the $2,250,000 increase. He lost by three votes. In all, the reduction will wipe out about 700 CSC jobs.

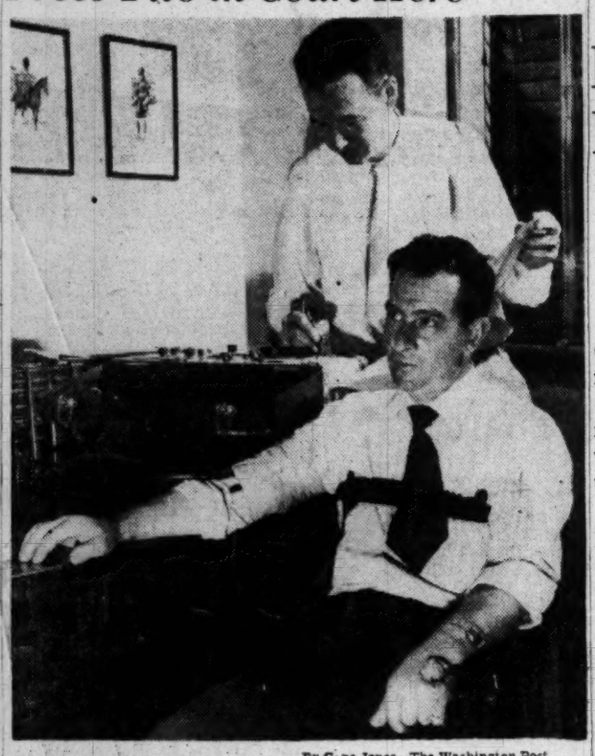
The cutback means that the CSC will be forced to direct Federal agencies to do more recruiting, examining, job classification, etc. The commission won't have the staff to do it.

FEDERAL TRADE was given a $100,000 increase by the Senate. If finally approved, about 30 FTC employes would retain their jobs . . . BUDGET BUREAU was given a $331,340 increase over its House-approved budget, enough to retain 53 employes threatened with the axe . . . COUNCIL OF ECONOMIC ADVISERS would hire four new employes with the $40,000 increase voted by the Senate . . . FEDERAL POWER was given a $113,000 increase over its House-approved budget . . . FEDERAL COMMUNICATIONS got an increase of $108,000 over the House, but O'Mahoney said it would have to wipe out 49 jobs, nevertheless.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS ADMINISTRATION must layoff 600 additional employes here and 400 others in its field offices. The Senate yesterday refused to go along on a proposed increase of $2,600,000 in the PBA budget. It sustained the House budget figure.

PBA will lose more than 2000 employes as a result of the House-Senate action. Several hundred employes have already been given discharge notices. The layoff will hit building guards, elevator operators and charwomen as well as clerical and professional employes. The cut approximates 10 per cent in both dollars and personnel.

Use of Lie Detector Tests Frees Two in Court Here



By Gene Jones—The Washington Post

POLYGRAPH INVOKED—Everett Feller submits to a lie detector test in the corporation counsel's office, with Russell Chatham operating the device which he invented. The lie detector produced the graph shown below—all even grooves, which led to the dismissal of drunk driving charges against Feller Defendants in two Municipal Court cases were acquitted yesterday in a matter of minutes—thanks to a lie detector.

As a result of tests on the machine, a charge of driving under the influence of alcohol against Everett Feller, 40, of 1714 West Virginia ave. ne., was dropped and his conviction on a charge of passing a stop sign was set aside.

James Kansas, 51, of 1107 11th st. nw., who also took the test, will get back the $25 collateral he forfeited several months ago on a charge of disorderly conduct.

Feller was arrested last December 17 behind the wheel of an automobile that had collided with another car at Good Hope and Naylor rds. se. He insisted that immediately after the accident he had switched places with the actual driver of the car, because she had no permit.

Nevertheless, he was found guilty of passing the stop sign by Municipal Court Judge Thomas D. Quinn and on April 13 a jury convicted him on the drunken-driving charge. He asked for and was granted a new trial and agreed with Assistant Corporation Counsel Clark King to plead guilty to the charge if a detector showed he was lying. King agreed to nolle prosse the case if it showed he was telling the truth about who was the driver of the car.

Russell Chatham, a former police lieutenant in Indiana, volunteered to make the tests on the Polygraph (lie detector), which he says he designed.

He asked Feller a series of questions about his personal life, interspersed with questions about the accident. Feller answered quietly and Chatham, after studying the results, decided Feller had been truthful.

Earlier Chatham tested Kansas, who had been arrested May 18 after police set a trap for a man wanted for making indecent telephone calls to a woman.

Kansas steadfastly denied knowledge of the telephone calls and Chatham agreed-he was telling the truth.

King said lie-detector tests will not be used regularly in settling doubtful cases, because they are too expensive. Chatham made a special trip here and gave yesterday's tests without charge, King explained.

Gas Company Wins Round In Quest for Higher Rates

PUC Turns Down Request to Dismiss Increase Petition; New Hearing Set

The Washington Gas Light Co. yesterday won the first round in its quest for an additional $900,000 income from higher gas rates—of which more than a third would be paid out in taxes.

The Public Utilities Commission turned down a request to dismiss the gas rate increase petition, heard the company's case and then recessed until at least August 25 to give opponents time to work up their arguments.

The motion to dismiss the rate change request came from William A. Roberts, representing the Gas Consumers and Independent Appliance Dealers, a group which includes master plumbers who have been fighting the gas company for installing the appliances the utility sells.

The company asked for an "emergency" increase averaging about 7 per cent to bring in an additional $900,000 a year, contending "it is imperative that the company have additional revenues this year."

The company's case was presented before the PUC by Attorney Oscar Berry and by Otis H. Ritenour, company comptroller.

The utility contended that higher costs—chiefly four general wage and salary increases since January 1, 1946—have cut its rate of return to a "dangerously low" level.

Ritenour cited a mass of figures to show the firm, for the 12 months ending May 31 this year, earned 3.38 per cent on average investment. Roberts, however, said he believed the figure was "in the neighborhood of 6.8 per cent" and he said he would offer his own figures at the next hearing.

The Gas Co. comptroller presented a table to show what would happen to the additional $900,000 if the PUC approved the rate boost. Once the boost is granted, if it is, the utility will make a proposal for spreading the increase among home users, industrial firms and other consumers—all of whom will begin next Monday paying a 2 per cent sales tax on their present gas bills. This proposal, in turn, will be subject to a further PUC hearing.

The breakdown on the $900,000 shows that $36,000 would be paid out in District gross receipts taxes, another $43,200 in District income taxes and $311,904 in Federal income taxes, a total of $391,104.

The remaining $508,896 which would stay in the utility till, Ritenour explained, would bring the rate of return (using the past 12 months figures) up from 3.38 per cent to 4.93 per cent.

Statements for the past 10 years showed the rate of return for each year ending June 30: 1939—7.72; 1940—7.43; 1941—5.88; 1942—5.32; 1943—6.39; 1944—5.72; 1945—5.63; 1946—6.20; 1947—5.41 and for calendar 1948—4.25.

Taking part in or appearing at the hearings, among others, were John O'Dea, people's counsel; Lloyd B. Harrison, special assistant corporation counsel to the PUC; Dillard Stokes for the CIO Industrial Union Council; President John A. Connaughton of the Federation of Citizens Associations; Mrs. Edward B. Morris of the Ft. Davis Citizens Association and Norman Bomze of the Restaurant Beverage Association.

Youths Get Into Trouble

3 Youths Held In $5000 Bond In Slugging

Three Washington youths who allegedly held up, beat and robbed a restaurant proprietor in Arlington yesterday, were held in $5000 bond each on charges of armed robbery. Two others, juveniles, are held for Arlington County juvenile authorities.

The three who appeared before Arlington County Court Judge Hugh Reid are Charles Albert Riddle, jr., 20, of 1871 Newton st. nw.; James Howard Sebastian, 25, of 1346 Fairmont st. nw., and a girl, Ruth Norma Colton, 20, of 1358 Fairmont st. nw.

The victim was J. L. Heatwole of 4041 Lorcom lane, Arlington, owner of Britt's Restaurant, 1211 Wisconsin ave. nw.

He told police the five jumped him after he left a bus near his home Wednesday night, beat him with a nightstick and brass knuckles, and took a metal box containing $859 in cash and more than $50 in checks—the day's receipts from his restaurant.

After police broadcast an alarm, Park Police Pvts. C. A. Mason and P. C. Kimball spotted a car with the five in it speeding on Shirley highway. In the car, they said, they found the cash box, money and checks, a nightstick and brass knuckles.

After identifying the group, Heatwole was taken to Arlington Hospital with severe head injuries. His condition yesterday was reported satisfactory.

Arlington Police Chief Harry Woodyard and Detective John Sanders said the group admitted Sebastian, Riddle and one of the juveniles did the beating while the girl and the other juvenile stood watch, after having followed Heatwole home for several previous nights to determine his movements. The car they used, officers said, was rented.

Sebastian, the officers said, admitted being a former counterman in Heatwole's restaurant. Riddle, they said, admitted a dishonorable discharge from the Army, allegedly for black marketing.

HELD IN ROBBERY—James H. Sebastian, 25, and Charles Riddle, jr., 20, are shown in custody of Pvt. William Hammer, left, and Detective John Sanders of the Arlington police. The girl below, Ruth Colton, 20, is also accused of belonging to a young gang of five members who, according to police, beat up and robbed an Arlington resident yesterday

U. S. Fight On Fifth Column To Continue

And There'll Be No Witch Hunting, Justice Official Tells D. C. Legion

The "fight to smash the fifth column in this country" will continue and it will be done without any witch hunting, Alex Campbell, Assistant Attorney general in charge of the criminal division, told the 31st annual convention of the District Department of the American Legion last night.

Introduced as "the man who is making life thoroughly warm for the Communists of the United States," Campbell reviewed a year of Department of Justice activities on the anti-Communist front.

Tom C. Clark, Attorney General, had been scheduled to address the opening session of the convention in the Shoreham Hotel but cancelled the speech when President Truman yesterday offered him a place on the United States Supreme Court bench.

Campbell, speaking in Clark's stead, said: "This will probably be the last time in my life I will have the privilege of speaking both for the Attorney General and an associate justice of the Supreme Court."

Campbell described Clark as "one of the greatest attorney generals in the history of the United States."

"It was about a year ago tonight," he said, "that he began his courageous drive against the fifth column in America."

He cited cases prosecuted this year such as the Alger Hiss case and the New York Communists, and brought cheers from his audience when he said: "Judy Coplon was convicted by a jury of her peers of espionage."

"Some people ask," Campbell said a bit later, "why should we spend a lot of the taxpayers' money in giving Russian spies a trial in this country. The answer is obvious. It is one of the great foundations of democracy that a man is innocent until he is proved guilty beyond a reasonable doubt—the exact contrary of the police state, where a man is guilty until he is proved innocent."

Some 1000 degelates jammed into the bunting-decked main ballroom of the Shoreham to witness the colorful opening ceremonies and hear Campbell's address.

Rape Charge Against Hyattsville Man Nolle Prossed

A rape case placed against Curry J. Carter, 44, 4525 Buchanan st., Hyattsville, on the complaint of a 16-year-old girl Tuesday night, was nolle prossed in Hyattsville Police Court yesterday.

A second warrant, charging contributing to the delinquency of a minor, was sworn out immediately by Prince Georges County authorities, and Carter was remanded to jail in lieu of $500 bond, pending hearing of the case in the county's Juvenile Court.

Assistant State's Attorney Hervey G. Machen said the rape charge was nolle prossed because there was "insufficient evidence" that rape had been committed. The girl, who lives in Hyattsville, told police she was assaulted by Carter after he had driven her to a secluded spot just outside the town.

Arlington Police Raiders Seize Gambling Data, 2 Men in Home

Arlington police yesterday made a gambling raid on a home, arrested two men, seized equipment—and obligingly took several telephone racing and number bets from unsuspecting customers.

Seized at the home of Milton Thevilon Arrington, 2400 N. Columbus st., Arlington, police said, were:

Several hundred numbers slips, two slot machines, an adding machine, two telephones, $4700 in cash, three punchboards and a mimeograph machine.

Arrington, 42, and Paul J. Wagner, 26, of 2503 N. 18th st., Arlington, were charged with taking horse race bets, possession of slot machines and punchboards and operating a lottery "known as the numbers game."

While policemen Russell Runyon, George P. Coppage, John E. Wise and Walter B. Bell were gathering up the loot, the telephone rang. They said they took turns answering and recorded eight to 10 horse race and numbers bets.

Police said they had been trailing Arrington for about six months. Arrington was arrested in May, 1947, by the Metropolitan police vice squad and charged with possessing numbers slips.

Arrington gave his occupation as salesman and Wagner as taxi-driver. The men were released on $2000 bond each for court appearance August 3.

Elevator Man Arrested On Lottery Charge

Rossie Lee Barber, 42, 6211 H st., Fairmont Heights, Md., was arrested by vice squad detectives yesterday at 1320 F st. nw., where Barber runs an elevator. Vice Squad Lieut. Roy Blick said undercover men had placed numbers bets with Barber three days in a row.

Vice squad men moved in on Barber yesterday after undercover men placed a bet with marked money. He was charged with operating a lottery and possession of lottery slips. Released on a $1500 bond, Barber will appear before the United States Commissioner today.

Study Sought For Property Tax Exemption

Senate District committee members yesterday called for a study of ways to tighten up present property tax exemptions for private institutions in the District.

They made the proposal, paradoxically, while approving a bill to exempt the Washington property of the Colonial Dames of America, at 2715 Q st. nw., on the ground that similar institutions were already exempt here. Corporation Counsel Vernon West estimated it would relieve the organization of about $1700 in taxes a year.

Senator Estes Kefauver (D., Tenn.) called attention to a list of private tax-exempt organizations here, prepared by District officials. Their real estate taxes would total some $344,000 this year if Congress had not specifically exempted them.

West said that a few of them might qualify for some exemptions under the general law exempting property of educational, religious and charitable organizations.

Senator Lester C. Hunt (D., Wyo.) while not opposing the Colonial Dames bill, said that "some over-all action should be taken putting a stop to this (tax exemptions) from here on out."

Senator John Foster Dulles (R., N. Y.) attending his first meeting as a member of the District committee, said that the exempting of specific institutions was a "strange practice." Senator Robert C. Hendrickson (R., N. J.) said that every statute giving a special exemption was unconstitutional. Dulles said that it might be advisable to take away some of the exemptions, and Senator Hendrickson said he thought "the whole situation should be reappraised."

Gas Blast Burns Fatal to Man, 41

James Daly, 41, of 5718 Euclid ave., Cheverly, Md., died in Georgetown Hospital yesterday from severe burns sustained in gas explosion at a Government installation in Rosslyn, Va., Monday. Daly was employed at the installation.

3 Escapees From Laurel Still at Large

District and Maryland police last night were still trying to track down the three inmates of the District Training School in Laurel, Md., who escaped the institution Wednesday.

Police said the trio returned to the school just before dark Wednesday, prowled around the grounds and made several attempts to get into the institution to liberate other inmates.

Meanwhile the Commissioners agreed yesterday to the permanent assignment of five civilian guards to the District Training School. The added guard personnel was authorized by Congress in the 1950 District budget.

Welfare Director John W. Tramburg said the institution has not had any fulltime guards for several years.

Maryland State Police also posted a special guard

The fugitives are Robert Smith, 25; Matthew Troyer, 26; and Edward White, 24, all of Washington. They were serving sentences on convictions ranging from assault to attempted rape.

Miss Cockrill Approved for Juvenile Court

Miss Edith Cockrill yesterday won unanimous approval of the Senate District Committee to be judge of the Juvenile Court here.

Miss Cockrill met the committee members in an executive session, and heard her qualifications for the judgeship warmly praised by Senator Estes Kefauver (D., Tenn.) and Rep. Jere Cooper (D., Tenn.).

Her testimony was an answer to Senator Lester C. Hunt (D., Wyo.) who asked if she would resign her post in the event she became incapacitated—a reference to the fact that Miss Fay Bentley retains her Juvenile Court judgeship although she is a voluntary patient at St. Elizabeths Hospital. Miss Cockrill said she thought she would resign if incapacitated.

Committee approval sent Miss Cockrill's nomination to the Senate where quick approval is expected. Her appointment is for a six-year term. Miss Bentley's position expires when her present term ends in 1952.

Strubinger Named To High Customs Post

Commissioner Frank Dow yesterday appointed David B. Strubinger to be assistant commissioner of customs.

Stubinger, a career employe with 29 years of Government service, has been with Customs since 1939, and his appointment is a promotion from the position of chief of the division of budget and management.

Radioactive Mosquitoes Help Army Chemists Trace Travels

"Quick, Henry, the Geiger counter!"

Scientists at the Army Chemical Center at Edgewood Arsenal, Md., have added something new, radioactivity, to an old enemy, the mosquito.

Purpose of the feat, they explained, is strictly scientific. It should help, they said, to tell man more about the lives and travels of the disease-bearing species.

Mosquitoes chosen for radioactivity incubation, reported investigators C. C. Hassett and D. W. Jenkins, were aedes aegypti, the yellow fever variety. Radiophosphorus was the medium chosen for the atomic age insect-banding process.

Beta radiation from the insects bred in radioactive water were found measurable with autoscalers, the radiation detectors for atomic research, they reported. Moreover, they reported, such radioactivity doesn't wash off.

Report of the new development is not expected to change man's age-old reflex at the sound of a mosquito.

District Starlings Facing Kindly but Firm Slaughter

The Senate District Committee agreed yesterday that Washington's starlings should be liquidated, but by humane methods, after trapping.

The committee approved and sent to the Senate floor a bill to permit the District to wage war on starlings, after adopting the proposal of Senator Karl E. Mundt (R., S. Dak.) that trapping, and no other methods, should be used.

The bill has cleared the House, but its version did not specify trapping. Senate committee emphasis was placed on a humane approach. Later the question arose how the starlings, once trapped, would be humanely extinguished.

"We'll probably use gas," District officials said.

The committee also approved bills to broaden the District's boiler inspection law, and to clear the way for Washington public school teachers to participate in the international exchange teacher program.

Also adopted by the committee were adverse subcommittee reports on bills (1) to authorize flight experience for District students in aviation ground course; (2) to authorize issuing an osteopath's license to Maria G. Waksmundzka, and (3) to regulate barber shop hours.

Two D. C. Colonels Leave Army Today

Two Washington coloners—one with the Air Force, the other an Army instructor assigned to the D. C. National Guard—who began their careers as enlisted men more than 30 years ago, will retire today following formal review ceremonies.

Col. Charles Maylon, 54-year-old Bolling Air Force Base officer who enlisted as a private 37 years ago, will be honored by generals, old comrades, 3000 marching troops and a 100-piece band at a review scheduled for 4 p. m. at Bolling.

Col. Charles M. Myers, 54, a native Washingtonian who enlisted in the District Guard 32 years ago and remained in the Regular Army following his World War I service, last night received the honors of the 260th Anti-Aircraft Group, National Guard, the State Staff Detachment and the National Guard Band at the Armory. Brig. Gen. William H. Abendroth, new commanding general of the District Guard, attended the ceremony.

Colonel Maylon has served for the past several years as executive officer for Lieut. Gen. Idwal H. Edwards, Air Force deputy chief of staff for personnel.

Colonel Maylon, who enlisted in the infantry in 1912 and shortly afterward was transferred to the Air Force, lives with his wife and a daughter, Miss Margaret Louise Maylon, at 2917 W st. se. Another daughter, Mrs. Helen Adams, lives at Langley Air Force Base, Va.

Colonel Myers, has been assigned to the local Guard for the past three years.

Colonel Myers and his wife live at 5447 42d st., Chevy Chase, Md. They have a son, Charles Myers of Arlington, Va., and a daughter, Miss Mildred Myers, a student at Wilson Teachers College.

Mrs. Lillie E. Earnest

Funeral services for Mrs. Lillie Estelle Earnest, 74, of 4006 35th st., Mount Rainier, Md., who died Wednesday at Prince Georges General Hospital, will be held at 3 p. m. today at the W. D. Diuguid funeral chapel at Lynchburg, Va. Burial will be in the Lynchburg Cemetery.

Mrs. Earnest, who had been ill for several months, was a native of Lynchburg. Her parents were Susie and Henry Clay Dillon.

Mrs. Earnest, who had lived in Mount Rainier about 45 years, was a member of the Mount Rainier Methodist Church, and was its organist for a time. The church's Epworth League was organized in her home.

Surviving her are four daughters: Mrs. Evelyn V. Thomas, 4112 Queensbury rd., Hyattsville, Md.; Mrs. Dorothy G. Smallwood, Cumberland, Va.; Mrs. Hazel V. Stephen, 4405 Sheridan st., University Park, Md.; Mrs. Lillian O. Wilson, 33 Walker ave., Gaithersburg, Md.; 14 grandchildren and 5 great-grandchildren.

Capt. R. E. Conrad

Funeral services for Capt. Robert E. Conrad, USN, ret., assistant director of the Brookhaven National Laboratory in New York, will be held at 3:30 p. m. today in the Fort Myer Chapel. Burial will be in Arlington Cemetery with full naval honors.

Captain Conrad died Tuesday after a three-year siege of leukemia. A 1927 Naval Academy graduate, he served as director of the planning division of the Navy's office of research and invention during the war. He retired in 1947.

Rear Admiral William N. Thomas, USN, will officiate at the services.

Silver Spring Elects New Mayor Who Wants 2-Day Work Week Installed

The Washington Post

Mrs. Betty Ruth McDevitt, Silver Spring newspaperwoman, is the newly elected "mayor" of Silver Spring.

In the "mayor" election to promote "Shop Silver Spring Week," Mrs. McDevitt received 6618 of the more than 32,000 votes cast. Ballots were printed in the three Silver Spring newspapers.

Six runners-up in the race—five men, one woman—will make up the Silver Spring "City Council." They and "Mayor" McDevitt will receive the key to the city in ceremonies tonight.

The election was sponsored by the Retail Merchants Association of the Silver Spring Board of Trade.

Mrs. McDevitt, a correspondent for The Washington Post and reporter and columnist for The Maryland News, campaigned on a platform which urged: (1) Future voting by radar, (2) two days per week work for all municipal employes, and (3) the election of Betty McDevitt for mayor, "because I know nothing about administration and the people can tell me what to do."

Mrs. McDevitt, who lives at 1320 Dale dr., is the mother of a 17-year-old son, and a delegate to Allied Civic Group of Silver Spring which represents 22 area civic organizations.

The six runners-up elected to the "City Council" are: Kenneth Clark, Silver Spring florist, 4768 votes; Charles Buscher, general manager of the Montgomery County Liquor Control Board, 4727 votes; Mrs. Helen Mason, co-owner of a Silver Spring florist shop, 1778 votes; Charles Diffenbaugh, clerk at the Silver Spring Post Office, 1746 votes; Einar Christensen, attorney and president of the Board of Trade, 1652 votes; and Fred L. Lutes, president of the Suburban National Bank, 1610 votes.

Mrs. McDevitt and the council will be met by an official welcoming committee at 7:30 p. m. today on Georgia ave. at the District Line. Following a parade through the Silver Spring business district, they will be presented the key to the city on the Post Office steps.

The council will convene for a special "legislative" session at 8 p. m. Monday in the hearing room of the County Building. "Shop Silver Spring Week" will run July 30 through August 6.

Ashes of Three Newsmen Arrive Here

The ashes of three of the 13 American newspaper correspondents killed in a plane crash near Bombay, India, July 12, arrived in Washington yesterday afternoon.

The ashes were those of Thomas Falco, 39, European expert for Business Week magazine, S. Burton Heath, 50, roving correspondent for the Newspaper Enterprise Association (NEA) and 1939 winner of a Pulitzer Prize, and James Branyan, 31, Houston (Tex.) Post reporter.

The remains were among those of nine newsmen brought to New York by a KLM (Royal Dutch Airlines) plane and met by a Department of State representative, who dispatched them in accordance with family requests.

Funeral services for Mr. Heath will be held at 3 p. m. today in Arlington Cemetery. He was a twice-wounded veteran of World War I.

A requium mass for Mr. Falco will be celebrated at 10 a. m. tomorrow at St. Francis Xavier Church, 28th st. and Pennsylvania ave. se. Burial will be in Cedar Hill Cemetery.

A Houston Post representative is taking the remains of Mr. Branyan to Texas.

The remains of four of the newspapermen killed in the crash have not yet been returned to the United States.

The newsmen were en route from Batavia, following a six-week tour of Indonesia as guests of the Dutch Government, to Amsterdam when the accident occurred.

Pfc. Aldo Romersa

Private First Class Aldo Romersa, 26, Washington native who was killed in Germany in 1944 will be reburied in Arlington Cemetery today after services starting at 2 p. m.

The son of Mr. and Mrs. Steve Romersa, 650 59th ave., Capitol Heights, Md., Private First Class Romersa was killed while on combat duty with the Twenty-sixth Infantry Division.

He was educated at the Capitol Heights School and was engaged in construction work when he entered the Army in 1940.

Besides his parents, Private First Class Romersa is survived by two sisters and four brothers. They are Mrs. Eida Baranuk and Mrs. Louise Talbert, of the Capitol Heights address, and Joseph Romersa, 3110 Rittenhouse st. nw.; Pete Romersa, Raymond Romersa, and Jack Romersa, of the Capitol Heights address.

Mrs. Damrosch

Conductor's Wife Dies In Maine

Bar Harbor, Me., July 28 (AP).—Mrs. Walter Damrosch, wife of the internationally known musical conductor, died here last night.

Mrs. Damrosch

She was the former Margaret Blaine, daughter of James G. Blaine, who went from Maine newspaper ranks to become Secretary of State. They were married in 1890.

The Damrosch's were married soon after his first triumphs as a conductor. A year previously he had visited the Blaine cottage at this exclusive resort.

A resident of New York City, Mrs. Damrosch died at the summre home of her daughter, Mrs. Gretchen Finletter.

Mrs. Damrosch's father, the "Plumed Knight" of American politics, was nominated for the presidency by the Republican Party in 1884. He was defeated by Grover Cleveland.

Mrs. Damrosch said in an interview several years ago that her father's nomination for President in 1884 remained a vivid girlhood memory.

Funeral services will be held at St. Saviour's Episcopal Church Friday at 11 a.m.

6-Month Net Of Geico Sets New Record

By S. Oliver Goodman

Government Employes Insurance Co. Geico reported record net income of $596,963 in the first six months this year, compared with $429,562 in the same 1948 period.

Goodwin

The net was equal to $3.99 a share on the 150,000 common shares outstanding at the end of the period, compared with $2.86 a share on the 125,000 shares on June 30, 1948. A 20 per cent stock dividend was paid at the end of first half this year.

President Leo Goodwin noted that premium writings and net earnings set new records in the first six months. He added that the auto casualty firm's business has expanded so much that a six-story building at 14th and L sts. nw., has been purchased as the new headquarters. The structure, which is being evacuated this week by the Federal Housing Administration, was purchased for $525,000, he said. Another $150,000 will be expended for alterations and renovations, including complete air-conditioning. Containing 48,000 square feet of working space, the building is expected to be occupied by Geico in the late fall this year.

Organization of the Government Employes Life Insurance Co. is progressing at a satisfactory pace, Goodwin reported, and the first policy is expected to be sold in the near future.

GEICO received an excess profits tax refund of $50,221 this year, applicable to 1943 and 1944, which added to the net for the first six months (after payment of dividend) brought surplus to $1,563,424 as of June 30. This compared with $1,051,423 surplus on the same date last year.

RAINBOW ROADS: Don't expect it tomorrow or even next week but roads colored cream, red, green, blue or in fact any shade are now possible. Britain's Road Research Laboratory, after many years of experiment, reports it has produced asphalt in a series of bright colors at a cost not much greater than the present black shade. Pigmented 'albino' bitumens are the secret.

ODD LOTS: John W. Chambers, former traffic and sales representative for Eastern Air Lines in Washington, has been promoted to assistant manager in Charlotte, N. C. . . . Cigar sales, sometimes referred to as a business barometer, increase 8.2 per cent in June over same 1948 month . . . Kaiser-Frazer yesterday introduced the Vagabond, a new de luxe utility sedan with 130 cubic feet of cargo space . . . Deposits of the Nation's 530 mutual savings banks rose 141 million dollars during June to a total of $18,944,000,000 . . . Ford Motor Co. has started work on an Israel government order for about 1800 vehicles to cost about four million dollars . . . Auto output this week is estimated at 140,794 vehicles, against the previous week's all-time high of 151,551.

Yanks Boost Lead to 4 Games by Beating Tribe, 3-2

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

IT'S GREAT to be a Redskin. It says so right here in the wordy brochure addressed to the 42 football players who will be setting out today for the team's training camp at Occidental College, Los Angeles.

In case the athletes have no proper appreciation of their great luck in being Redskins, General Manager Dick McCann tells them flatly they deserve congratulations . . . "You're in the big leagues . . . you will be staying at the best hotels . . . riding the Nation's best trains, and playing in the best stadiums . . . you and your teammates are carrying on a fine tradition . . . great players . . . good men have worn the Burgundy and Gold of your team . . . make it an honor and a privilege to be a Redskin."

POVICH

There may be some bewilderment when the Redskin train reaches Clovis, N. Mex., on Sunday at noon, and a tall fellow named Sammy Baugh joins the party and is handed one of the brochures. The first thing he will read is: "Congratulations . . . you are with the Redskins." It may strike Baugh as a bit odd, inasmuch as he has been with the Redskins for 13 seasons and why these sudden congratulations.

THERE MAY be a bit of a surprise for another Redskin in the agenda McCann has drawn up for the Redskins' Western safari. Last December, Head Coach Turk Edwards read in the papers that he had relinquished his job to accept the fancier title of Executive Vice President of the Redskins. That title apparently went up in vapor, somehow.

No executive vice president of the Redskins is listed in the little booklet; in fact, no vice presidents of any kind. The best Edwards gets out of it is a reference as line coach, and assistant to Head Coach John Whelchel. Maybe the Redskin owners don't love Edwards in July as they did in December.

The Redskins haven't won a game yet, but McCann already is promising them "when this trip is finished, you will come back to Washington to the warmest welcome ever given any professional athletic team. The fans of Washington are first in peace, first in war and first in loyalty. Redskin teams have not always been champions (champions twice in 12 years) but Redskin fans are second to none. Give them something to cheer about."

IN CASE your boy happens to be a Redskin, don't be alarmed that he might stray off the reservation or otherwise get lost. They're the most heavily chaperoned outfit in the league, and have precious little thinking for themselves to do from the moment they leave Washington this evening until they return on September 12.

A special menu is prepared for each meal by the Redskins' dietitian (honest) and trainers. "There are no substitutions and no seconds . . . for your stomach's sake. Don't tip the waiter. Just sign the meal check he gives you. The Redskins will pay all tips to waiters and Redcaps. Occidental College will be your home for four weeks. Treat it like your home . . . use ashtrays for your ashes and butts. It's all right to save your clippings . . . but don't throw the rest of the paper around on the floors and the lawns."

He cautions the Redskins to dress the part of great players, good men. "When riding in Redskins' private cars dress for comfort. When boarding or leaving trains, or in hotel lobbies, or in public places, your wearing apparel must include a necktie and a suit jacket or sport coat." Sartorially, these Redskins are not going to disgrace the Nation's Capital.

And in training camp, they get the last word in regimentation. No sloppy correspondence to the folks at home. "The Redskins will provide you with special Redskins' training camp stationery." And McCann has also set up a complaint department, headed by himself. "If you have any beefs about anything at any time, see Richard P. McCann. He's the general manager of the club. He pays the bills and tips and therefore is in the best position to see to it that you get what the Redskins pay for."

Go, team!

Boxing Bill Hearing Today

Public hearings on proposed changes in the District of Columbia boxing laws begin this morning at 10 o'clock in the Old House Office Building.

Among other proposals, the D. C. Boxing Commission is asking for a cut in television and motion picture rights at all local fights.

Representative Orrin Harris (D., Ark.) will preside over the hearings. Among those present today will be District Commissioner Guy Mason, Assistant Corporation Counsel Oliver Gasch, Boxing Commissioner Harvey L. Miller and Promoters Mrs. Florence Turner and Goldie Ahearn.

Cards Rout Phils, 10-2; Cubs Lose To Bums, 7-1

St. Louis, July 28 (AP).—The conquering Cardinals made it three straight over the Philadelphia Phillies today, with a 16-hit assault that ran the score to 10-2 while the Phils stumbled through with five errors.

Ken Heintzelman, the Phils' star lefthander who nearly always is bad medicine for St. Louis, lasted only two innings and broke his string of nine straight victories.

Al Brazle let Philadelphia down with seven well scattered hits.

Third Baseman Willie Jones made three of the Philadelphia errors.

Thus the Cardinals maintained their game-and-a-half lead over Brooklyn, which also won in Chicago today, and so both are in winning form for the big Dodger-Cardinal series here this week-end.

An off-color note for the Cardinals today was the fact that Stan Musial, who has been red hot lately, went hitless in five times at bat.

The Redbird batting punch came from Chuck Diering, who doubled three runs home in the second inning as the highlight of a five-run rally.

Gene Hermanski Smacks Grand Slam for Dodgers

Chicago, July 28 (AP).—The Brooklyn Dodgers stayed close on the heels of the League Leading St. Louis Cardinals today, taking the odd game of the three-game series from the Chciago Cubs, 7-1.

Gene Hermanski's grand slam homer in the sixth inning off Bob Rush broke up a 1-1 tie and paved the way for the Dodgers' triumph. Jackie Robinson and Duke Snider also hit homers for Brooklyn. They came in succession off Walt Dubiel in the seventh inning. Snider's was his fourteenth and Robinson's his eleventh.

Rosedale, Bugs Play at Ball Park For Johnson Title

The Takoma Bugs and Rosedale passed their semifinals tests yesterday and became the 14-and-under representatives in the Walter Johnson Memorial Baseball School League city championship series at Griffith Stadium on August 12 and 13.

The Bugs, sponsored by Pat Troiano, hung up a 1-0 victory over the Hearst Hustlers at Takoma as Billy Smith, a Macfarland Junior High lad, hurled a 1-hitter.

Rosedale had an easier time of it, running up a 17-2 win over Turkey Thicket. Bill Coalyard was the winning pitcher, allowing only three hits, two homers and a triple, all by Bill Landry.

Rosedale and the Bugs will play a two out of three championship series at the ballpark. Yesterday Rosedale and the Yankees earned the right to compete for the 12-and-under title at Griffith Stadium, also on August 12 and 13.

HE CAN'T LOSE IT—Dennis Bolster, 15-year-old Gonzaga student, can't afford to miss a lick in the National Junior Golf tournament at the Congressional Country Club. His friends say that Dennis has only one good ball with which to play the tournament. It rolled in the right direction yesterday as he won two matches by 1-up scores

Bolster, Billy Wolfe Win Two More Junior Golf Matches

By West McLean
Post Reporter

Washington sent two 15-year-old junior golfers into the fourth round of the Junior Golf championship today at Congressional Country Club when Billy Wolfe and Dennis Bolster both won their second and third round matches yesterday.

Bolster scored the biggest upset of the day when he disposed of Ronald Hughes, Los Angeles, 1 up on 19 holes in the afternoon match.

Bolster, three up at the turn, lost his lead on the back nine and needed to win the eighteenth to keep the match alive after he had gone one over par on the seventeenth to give Hughes a one-up lead. Hughes, low medalist, nationally with a 69, took a bogie five when he three-putted the final green as Bolster got down in regulation four.

On the extra hole the two boys drove equally well and Bolster was short of the green with his second shot while Hughes rolled across and down an embankment into the rough.

The Gonzaga lad laid his chip shot two feet from the hole and Hughes countered with one four inches farther away. After marking Bolster's ball, Hughes curled his two-footer for the hole and a and a foot past. Boster dropped his two-foter for the hole and a one-up win.

Sinks 10-foot Putt

Bolster, local medalist, also won his second round match in the morning with a dramatic finish. All even with John Moynihan, Troy, N. Y., coming to the last green he sank a ten-foot putt for a par as Moynihan missed his eight-footer giving Bolster a one-up victory.

Wolfe, former Washington Post schoolboy champ, advanced less spectacularly but none the less surely. Billy ousted Murray Vernon, jr., 2 and 1, in the morning and whipped Ronald LaFraugh, Lansing, Mich., 4 and 2, in the afternoon.

Wolfe lost the first hole of his morning round but scrambled back into command to post a one over par, 36, 36—72, in spite of two double bogeys on his card.

Bolster Meets Brewer

In the afternoon, Wolfe was two down after five holes, but swept the next three to hold a one-up lead at the turn. He increased his lead on the tenth, twelfth and fourteenth with pars and ended it halving the fifteenth with another par. Billy showed a three over par card for his fifteen holes of the third round.

Bolster meets Gay Brewer, Lexington, Ky., comedalist, in this morning's fourth round while Wolfe faces Randolph Carey, Denvery, Colo., southpaw.

Rebel Tony Baker, Atlanta, Ga., scored another big upset when he won the last three holes from Pat Schwab, Dayton, Ohio, junior who turned in a scorching 67 Wednesday. Baker squared the match on the eighteenth with a closing rush of par, par, bird and and added another par on the first extra hole to take a one-up victory.

Mangrum Ties Harbert's 67

St. Paul, Minn., July 28 (AP).—The golfing wrecking crew took over the Keller public course today, and when they were through two of their number were tied for the lead in the Western Open tourney with 67s, five strokes under par.

Tied at that figure were Chick Harbert, Detroit, and Lloyd Mangrum, Chicago. And right behind them with under-par cards were 24 other contestants. Eleven more matched par of 72 for the 6557-yard course.

Harbert was the first in. He had just fair luck on the outgoing nine, making it in 35, one under par.

Mangrum played more consistent golf, getting a two-under-par 34 on the out nine and a three-under-par 33 coming in. He dropped a 15-foot putt for the tying count.

Tied at 68 were Ted Neist, Walla Walla, Wash.; Jimmy Demaret, Ojai, Calif.; Cary Middlecoff, Memphis, Tenn.; Bill Kaiser, Louisville, Ky., and Jimmy Thomson, New York.

A stroke behind them were Amateur Albert Besselink, Niles, Ill.; and professionals Ky Laffoon, St. Andrews, Ill.; Sam Snead, White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., Tony Holguin, Guadalajara, Mexico; E. J. "Dutch" Harrison, formerly of Little Rock, who has signed to play with the St. Andrews, Ill., club, and Fred Hawkins of Antioch, Ill.

Roberto Ortiz Reports to Nats

Roberto Ortiz, who jumped from the Nats to the Mexican League and thence to Venezuela, rejoined the Nats yesterday.

The long-ball hitting outfielder, reinstated along with other jumpers by Commissioner Chandler recently, reported too late to get into yesterday's 13-7 defeat by Detroit. Pitcher Sandalio Consuegra, the Nats' other Cuban importation, is still en route.

Colonial, Kane Win In Montgomery Softball

The Montgomery County Park and Planning Commission's double elimination softball tournament opened yesterday with four games on the Rock Creek diamonds.

Results were: Colonial Liquors, 2, St. George 1; Kane's Tavern 9, Naval Ordnance 5; Silver Spring Rockets 1, Myron Cowell 0; Gallaher and Huguely 5, Blue Ribbon 3. Second-round games are slated for next Thursday at Rock Creek.

Haynes Flops in 9th Again, Detroit Gets 7 With Two Out

By Morris Siegel
Post Reporter

Needing one run to break a tie with two away in the top of the ninth and nobody on base, the Detroit Tigers didn't get it.

Instead, they got seven runs and harpooned the Nats in the getaway game of the four-game series, 13-7.

Pitcher Paul (Dizzy) Trout supplied the big blow of the fantastic inning, a grand-slam homer, but the Tigers didn't need the four runs he stroked in.

Pitchers Joe Haynes and Al Gettel had already done the damage by walking in three runs to dissolve the 6-6 stalemate and move the Nats another step forward on their newest losing streak which now stands at two in a row.

Haynes proved he was equally ineffective in daylight as well as under the lights. Scarcely more than 12 hours after he had helped the Tigers win last night, he was back on the mound losing again, this one being his sixth.

Haynes Hits Kell

Haynes came in in the seventh and the Nats promptly staked him to a 6-5 lead, but Haynes pitched the Tigers into a tie in the eighth.

After retiring the first two Tigers in the ninth Haynes proceeded to show the skimpiest gathering of the year, only 1485 customers, that he was pitching over his head.

He hit George Kell, pitched a double to Vic Wertz and then as a change of pace walked Johnny Groth intentionally. The strategy wasn't too bad inasmuch as Groth already accounted for three of the Tigers' 15 hits with two singles and a double.

Haynes' next act was to walk Pat Mullin to force in the first run. Al Gettel came in at this stage and from his performance you'd have thought Haynes was still pitching.

Gettel walked Johnny Lipon and Robby Swift to make it 9-6. Obviously tired at the snail's pace at which the Tigers were scoring. Gettel then delivered himself of his 15th homerun pitch of the season to Trout. The ball landed in the second row of the left-field stands.

Berry Ends Rally

He miraculously retired Neil Berry, batting for the second time and the Nats showed their appreciation by whipping up a run for him in the ninth, but the rally was six runs short.

The Nats made 12 hits, enough to win normally. But once again their pitching was a strictly from hunger.

Mickey Harris started out against Hal Newhouser and neither was around after the sixth inning. Harris, who still hasn't won since leaving the Red Sox for the Nats, was staked to a 2-0 lead, but the Tigers went ahead 3-2 in the fourth and then shelled him in the sixth with three more tallies to vault into a 5-2 command.

Newhouser, making his sixth bid for his eleventh victory, went out in the same half of the inning when the Nats got five singles and tied the score.

That's All for Newhouser

When Johnny Simmons, a .178 hitter slugged a two-run single off Newhouser, Tiger Manager Red Rolfe very logically deducted that his ace lefthander wasn't fooling anyone and he replaced him with Trout.

Sam Dente, who collected two singles, a double and triple in the losing cause, knocked in Eddie Robinson, who had walked, with his triple in the seventh to give the Nats a 6-5 lead.

The Tigers, who had already walloped two doubles and three triples, put together two singles and Lipon's double play for the tying run and that's the way they entrusted the situation to Haynes and Gettel in the ninth. They were taken care of admirably.

IN SHORT—The Nats' Al Kozak who injured his arm sliding into home Tuesday, may return to the lineup tonight when the Nats open a four-game series with the Browns . . . Dick Weik, winner of a nifty four-hitter over the Pirates in Monday's exhibition game, opens against the cellar-dwellers . . .

Stirnweiss Doubles Home Winning Run in Sixth

New York, July 27 (AP).—Allie Reynolds and Joe Page teamed up today to turn back Cleveland 3-2 and raise the American League lead of the Yankees over the surging Indians back to four full games.

A sweltering crowd of 45,951 saw a tense game climaxed by a sparkling ninth inning double play that saved the day for Reynolds and brought him his eleventh victory of the season against one defeat. Page, in his familiar relief role, forced Pinch Hitter Early Wynn to fly to Mapes in right field, whose sharp peg caught Roberto Avila going into third after the catch.

Reynolds started the Yankees to victory with a triple into the right field corner in the fifth that scored Snuffy Stirnweiss, who had also tripled off Bob Lemon. Reynolds scored on Phil Rizzuto's grounder, making it 2-2. Stirnweiss' double in the sixth brought in Bobby Brown with the winning run.

Cleveland's two runs were scored in the third. With Thurman Tucker on first on a fielder's choice, Larry Doby doubled, sending Tucker to third. Then Joe Gordon, an ex-Yankee, singled sharply to left, scoring both runners.

The master-minding of Indian Manager Lou Boudreau and Yankee Manager Casey Stengel reached almost ludicrous proportions in the electric ninth inning.

Boudreau opened things up with a single. He took himself out and put in Avila as a pinch runner. Pinch-hitter Hal Peck drew a base on balls. Reynolds pitched two strikes to Catcher Jim Hegan, where upon Boudreau sent in Wynn as pinch hitter for Hegan. Wynn, a switch batter, took up a left handed batting stance. So Stengel sent in Lefty Joe Page for Reynolds and dispatched Cliff Mapes to right field and Hank Bauer to left. After all this commotion Wynn, batting right handed, popped to Mapes to start the dramatic double play from the outfield. Ken Keltner batted for Pitcher Bob Lemon and grounded out to end the game.

Nats, Bosox Must Complete Their 6-Inning Game

President William Harridge of the American League yesterday advised Clark Griffith, president of the Washington Baseball Club, that the unfinished Boston at Washington game of July 7 must be completed.

That game was called at the end of six innings—with Boston leading 8 to 3—to permit the Red Sox to catch a train.

The remainder of the game will be completed as a prelude to the regularly scheduled game with Boston here on August 20.

The time limit game was protested by General Manager George Weiss of the league-leading New York Yankees.

Bosox Beat Chisox, 6-1; Ted Homers

Boston, July 28 (AP).—The Boston Red Sox made a clean sweep of their series with the Chicago White Sox today as Ellis Kinder racked up his eleventh victory of the season with a 6-1 verdict in blistering heat before a thin crowd of 5651 paying customers.

Kinder, whose victory gave him his best winning mark for any season in his major league career, had little trouble with the jugged White Sox lineup. He might have escaped with a shutout, but for an infield error, which set up the lone Chicago run in the sixth.

Howie Judson, who was charged with his twelfth loss against a single victory, pitched effectively for Chicago until he suddenly lost his control in the fourth.

With one away, he walked three batters in a row and "Zeke" Zarilla chased two of them home with a clean single to right. Ted Williams accounted for the third score with his twenty-sixth homer in the fifth and the Red Sox racked up three more in the seventh.

Canada Sends Fast Boat to Harmsworth

By Happy Walker

Detroit, July 28.—Reports that the Canadian Harmsworth challenger, Miss Canada IV, had attained speeds of from 130 to 150 miles per hour, trickled into regatta headquarters, following trial heats preceding her arrival for the initial heat to be staged tomorrow on the Detroit River.

Walker

E. A. Wilson and his son Harold, Ingersoll, Canada, owners of the Miss Canada, declined to comment, but added that "we think we're pretty fast."

It is not by accident that these particular power boat races, sometimes referred to as the power boat Olympics, are being held at Detroit.

The finest motors produced anywhere in the world, to say nothing of the most modern motor research laboratories and proving grounds are to be found in this teaming mechanical Mecca. It sounds a bit like a chamber of commerce script. But back to the Harmsworth events.

Today will see the first running of this fabulous trophy classic since 1933, when the veteran Gar Wood, now retired, but still pointing with pride to his unbeaten record, set a world mark of 124.91 miles per hour, winning this highly coveted cup for the United States. Gar Wood's record was established in his Miss America X, powered with four 12-cylinder Packard motors.

Latest reports indicate that the American team of three boats will be composed of Horace Dodge in My Sweetie, recent winner of the Gold Cup under the experienced driving of Bill Cantrell; Skip-a-Long, the West Coast entry of Stanley Dollar, jr., and Such Crust I, with Danny Arena at the wheel.

These stellar power creations have all appeared at the President's Cup Regattas. Jack Schaeffer's Such Crust I will be remembered as the winner of last year's President's Cup, taking the favored mug from Harry Lynn's Lahala in the thrilling final moments.

Yes, it will be quite a treat to mingle with power racingdom's great and near great. Gathered together will be such age-old celebrities as Gar Wood, George Reise, Horace Dodge, John Charles Thomas, Herb Mendlesohn, Bill Horn, and Jack Rutherford, all members of that mythical power boat hall of fame.

Mehner, Oliver Leech Cup Foes

Lieut. Frank Mehner, two-time Army singles champ, will meet Lieut. Charley Oliver, Air Force crown holder, in the feature match of the Leech Cup tennis championships which get under way this afternoon at 2:00 at the Army-Navy Country Club.

Six singles and three doubles matches are scheduled for today between the Army and Air Force.

TODAY'S PAIRINGS

New York Rallies After Losing Lead

Pittsburgh, July 28 (AP).—The New York Giants blew a five run lead today, but bounced back and defeated the Pittsburgh Pirates, 8-6, on the strength of Sid Gordon's twentieth home run of the season with a man on in the sixth inning.

Six of the Giant runs were scored after two men were out and nobody on. Harry Gumbert, obtained on waivers from Cincinnati yesterday, was the victim of Gordon's belt and was charged with the defeat.

Braves Hit 4 Homers To Wallop Reds, 11-2

Cincinnati, July 28 (AP).—Boston slugged out an 11 to 2 win over the hapless Cincinnati Reds today, as Warren Spahn coasted to his 12th mound victory of the season. He gave up six hits.

Bob Elliott, Alvin Dark, Elbie Fletcher, and Rookie Catcher Del Crandall hit for the circuit. Also pummeling three local hurlers was Ed Sauer, who got five safeties in as many times at bat to spearhead the Braves' 16-hit attack.

Berwyn Wins Playoff

Berwyn's Carroll Guest threw a two-hit shutout at Laurel, 3-0, yesterday to win the first half playoff of the Prince Georges County Boys Club League.

Loss Gives Heurich 2d Half Crown

The Heurich Brewers, watching from the sidelines, won The Washington Post-Industrial League's second-half championship yesterday as Naiman defeated Cameo, the Brewers' only remaining rival, 13-5, on the South Ellipse.

Cameo's loss was its third in 10 second-half games. Heurich won its eighth in 10 games to complete its schedule on Wednesday.

Cameo, which won the first-half championship, opens a two-out-of-three league title playoff series with Heurich Monday at 5:30 p. m. on the South Ellipse.

In giving the Brewers their big assist yesterday, Naiman pounded out 17 hits, including a two-run home run by Elmer Raba. Johnny Harvel had two doubles, scored a run and drove in two to help the Naiman's cause, too.

Bogley Wins Tough Match

Kalamazoo, Mich., July 28 (AP).—Top seeded Gil Bogley of Chevy Chase, Md., defending National Junior tennis champion, had rough going today to stay in the Western championship matches.

He finally eliminated Hamilton Richardson of Baton Rouge, La., 7—5, 6—4, in the quarterfinals. It is the first year in the junior division for 15-year-old Richardson, National Boys' champ.

Richardson raced ahead to a 4—1 lead in the first set before Bogley finally took his measure. In the second set, the decisive game went to deuce nine times. Richardson was eleventh seeded.

Fuchs Sets Mark In Shot but U. S. Trails at Oslo

Oslo, Norway, July 28 (AP).—James Fuchs of Yale bettered the world shot put record tonight as the United States edged within six points of Scandinavia in the "Little Olympics."

Fuchs threw the 16-pound shot 17.79 meters or 58 feet 4 27/64 inches. The listed world record of 57 feet 1 inch (17.40 meters) was set here in Oslo in 1934 by Jack Torrance of the United States.

Track experts here figured the powerful Americans would have little trouble in winning the three-night competition.

Junior Clinics Slated Today

A third junior golf clinic will be held at the Anacostia golf course in order to accommodate youngsters from 10 through 17 years desirous of receiving free instruction made available by District public parks golf courses.

Twenty-eight boys and girls already have enrolled at Anacostia. Classes of 17 golfers will report to Francis "Winky" Hart, Anacostia's instructor, today at 10 and 11 a. m. The full course includes eight lessons. Fort Dupont concludes a busy week today at 11 a. m. when its "B" group turns out, while Rock Creek's juniors report for their fifth weekly clinic this morning at 9 o'clock.

GOP Vote Big Factor In Virginia

By Richard Morris
Post Reporter

Virginia is in a dither over who may vote—and how—in Tuesday's Republican and Democratic primaries.

The State's first GOP primary is one reason. The plan of some Republicans to vote for a Democratic candidate is another. And the Attorney General's apparently contradictory comments on what the law allows is a third.

Attorney General J. Lindsay Almond was asked Tuesday who may vote in the Democratic primary.

He said he thought a person who pledged his support of the party's nominees should be permitted to vote in the Democratic primary.

"An Informal Opinion"

"It is silly to reason that because a man voted Republican last November he is a Republican now or for the rest of his life," Almond was quoted as saying.

The next day, however, he said this was "an informal opinion as to what I felt that the law should be on this subject."

He pointed to his law books and said the real test is how the voter cast his ballot for congressional nominees in the most recent election.

Almond told The Washington Post last night he would stick to the latter ruling if asked for an official opinion. He said the earlier statement was the result of "ruminating on the question with a reporter" and was merely his personal feeling on the matter.

In Roanoke yesterday, the Sixth District Republican Committee wrote Almond to ask an official decision on "just who may use Democratic and Republican ballots in the primary."

Chairman Bentley Hite said "Republicans are requested to go into the Republican primary and stay out of the Democratic primary."

Challenges Forecast

If GOP voters go into the Democratic primary, he said, "they may be challenged and embarrassed by Section 228 of the Code of Virginia, which in effect prohibits anyone from voting in the Democratic primary unless he voted Democratic in the last general election."

Other rumblings were heard yesterday in Roanoke, when Moss A. Plunkett, Almond's opponent in the current attorney general race, commented on the issue. He said:

"Whatever may be Mr. Almond's last position on this hot political question, he must continue to bear the stigma of having informally ruled or suggested that Section 228 of the Virginia election laws be violated on August 2, 1949, and of opening the doors to wholesale abuse thereof by 1948 Republicans . . ."

In Norfolk, Henry G. Luhring, a Republican Party official, said he plans to vote in the Democratic primary Tuesday despite the likelihood he will be challenged at the polls.

Behind the controversy is a situation unique in Virginia politics:

Walter Johnson, of Heathville, is the only Republican candidate for Governor. There are four Democratic candidates: Remmie L. Arnold, John S. Battle, Horace H. Edwards and Francis P. Miller.

Tradition has it in Virginia that, in case of a close Democratic primary vote, the candidate who can poll the most Republican votes may be assured of nomination.

This year, Henry A. Wise, former Republican National Committeeman, made an outright appeal to Republicans to forget their party affiliations and vote for Battle in the primary.

Fellow Republicans set up a cry of anguish. Battle said Wise's support was "highly patriotic," although "unsolicited."

Close Margin Likely

Since the Democratic race is apt to be decided by a close margin, some Democrats may welcome votes from the other camp. Likewise, others may consider them invalid.

Almond could not be reached by telephone last night. It appeared his late ruling—that ballots in the last Congressional election should determine party affiliation—will prevail.

There was no indication that any Democrats plan to vote for the Republican candidate.

Miller Terms Byrd Machine 'Contemptible' and 'Defeated'

Lexington, Va., July 28 (AP).—"The Byrd machine has already been defeated morally and spiritually," Francis Pickens Miller said in a radio address here tonight.

"Its methods of conducting political warfare have made it contemptible to decent citizens," said Miller, a candidate for the Democratic nomination for governor, urging all Virginians to vote in next Tuesday's Democratic primary.

Miller told his listeners that if they want "the Byrd machine to continue to run the State," then, he said, they should vote for John S. Battle.

"If you want more taxes and disgruntled elements of the Byrd machine to remain in power," he added, they should vote for Horace H. Edwards.

"But," he said, "if you are aware of our glorious heritage of freedom, if you want to set Virginia free from the Byrd machine, if you want us as Virginians to get back on the road our fathers blazed for us and build the kind of Virginia they hoped we would build, then vote for Francis Miller."

The candidate characterized his campaign as "a call for volunteers to create and maintain the kind of free State in Virginia which could be a model for the western world."

He gave the following list of things he said Virginians want but do not have:

"We want a Virginia where men and women in every community will be completely free to express their honest opinions without fear of reprisals or of persecution from a political machine or from any other source.

Byrd as Bos

"We want a Virginia where the elected representatives of the people in the localities are responsible to the people who elected them and not to a political boss in Washington.

"We want a Virginia where our children can receive from the public schools an education which will make it possible for them to compete on equal terms with the citizens of any other State in the Union.

"We want a government in Virginia which keeps the people informed of what is going on and uses democratic methods in conducting its business.

Brown in Plea For Battle Hits Sales Tax

Roanoke, Va., July 28 (AP).—Colonel J. Sinclair Brown of Roanoke County, former speaker of the State House of Delegates, and A. M. Bowman, jr., former Roanoke County treasurer and for 15 years chairman of the Sixth Congressional District Democratic Committee, tonight appealed to the voters to nominate State Senator John S. Battle for Governor in next Tuesday's primary.

In a radio forum led by Fred L. Hoback, chairman of the Battle forces in Roanoke County, the speakers disagreed with the sales tax proposal of Horace H. Edwards, favoring Senator Battle's plan which was described as removing the necessity of resorting to other forms of taxation whether it be by bond issue or sales tax, to provide school improvements.

Bowman asserted the sales tax could in no way reduce local levies on real estate and tangible personal property. These classifications are, by constitution, made subjects of local taxation.

He stated that the 75 million dollars which would be made available under the Battle plan in 1950 would enable localities to carry on an active building program without resorting to other forms of new taxation.

Colonel Brown defined the sales tax as simply another device to extract additional taxes from "an already heavily tax-burdened people.

He said the school construction program can be carried out without additional taxes. There is a surplus in the State treasury, he said, and Senator Battle would recommend that by July, 1950, 30 million dollars from this fund be made available to localities as a gift. In addition, at least 15 million dollars would be made available each year thereafter from the general fund.

Boy, 4, Cured of Polio; Father Stricken, Dies

Knoxville, Tenn., July 28 (AP).—T. Ford Seeuws of Johnson City took his 4-year-old son home in an ambulance yesterday, completely cured of polio.

Today Seeuws, 42, returned to General Hospital here in an ambulance—stricken with the same bulbar-type polio that had affected his son.

He died a few hours after entering the hospital.

Absent Voters Seek Ballots

Richmond, Va., July 28 (AP).—Election officials in some Virginia localities reported today record numbers of applications for absentee ballots for Tuesday's primaries.

At Richmond, the registrar reported approximately 1600 absentee ballot applications, a record number.

The Danville registrar noted a total of 777 applications, compared with 401 in the last election. At Roanoke, there were 630 applications, which officials said was the highest for the years since the war and the tightening up of absentee voter laws.

The attorney general's office has held that midnight last night was the deadline for applications for such ballots. They must be returned by election day to be counted with other ballots.

Montgomery Chest Names New Director

Louis L. Orgera former Asheville (N. C.) Chest official, has been named director of the Montgomery County Community Chest and Council. He will take over his duties Monday.

Orgera replaces Miss Mary E. Lucas, who resigned from the post a year ago. For the past three years, he has been director for the Asheville and Buncombe County Community Chest and Council.

A native of New York City he has worked with the Brooklyn Bureau of Charities, New York State Department of Welfare, and as superintendent of institutions for delinquent children in New York State. From 1943 to 1946, he was assistant director of the Birmingham (Ala.) Chest and director of the Birmingham Planning Council.

Lanning Resigns From Arlington's Civic Symphony

Van Lier Lanning, founder and director of the Arlington Civic Symphony announced yesterday he has accepted a post as director and conductor of the Jacksonville (Fla.) Symphony Orchestra.

Lanning

Lanning, of 3101 N. Glebe rd., will leave for his new job in August, he said.

I. Lee Potter, president of the Arlington Symphony's Board of Directors, said yesterday he has "about 10" applications for the director's post under consideration.

Lanning, once a National Symphony orchestra member, is also a former director of the Washington Synfonietta and the War Production Board Symphony and Chorus. He founded the Arlington Symphony in 1945.

Judge at Trial Of Reds Incapable 'Of Much More'

New York, July 28 (AP).—Federal Judge Harold R. Medina, who has been presiding at the Communist conspiracy trial for more than six months, wearily told wrangling attorneys today he is "physically and mentally incapable of going through much more."

"I must take a recess now and lie down for a minute," he said. He walked off the bench and was gone for 10 minutes.

Shortly after the judge returned, the defense introduced its tenth witness, Mrs. Yolanda Hall, of Chicago. She said she had been a Communist since 1939.

Service Will End On Beltsville Car Line Sunday

Capital Transit announced last night that service on Route 84, the Beltsville car line, will be discontinued Sunday.

The last car from Branchville will leave at 1:15 a. m. and from Beltsville at 1:35 a. m.

The line is being discontinued because of inadequate patronage. Company officials said the 3-mile Branchville-Beltsville line had been operating at a $35,000 annual loss.

Cocaine Smuggling Reported Increasing

"Extremely disturbing" increases in the smuggling of the drug cocaine into the United States were reported yesterday by the Narcotics Bureau.

Up to now, it said, there had not been any considerable traffic in cocaine, or the use of it, in this country.

In a report on "Traffic in Opium and Other Dangerous Drugs" during 1948, the bureau said:

"Quite reliable information is at hand indicating that cocaine is available in large quantities in Peru, Chile and Bolivia, and that American seamen are smuggling it regularly to the United States."

District Man Flees Ohio Workhouse

Dayton, Ohio, July 28 (AP). Three prisoners escaped from the Dayton workhouse last night by scaling a 20-foot barbed-wire-topped wall.

James Russell, workhouse superintendent, said the three were Richard E. Chevalier, 18, of Washington, D. C., serving a two-year sentence on a concealed weapon charge; Clyde Singleton, 26, and Oscar Tinch, 40, both of Dayton.

Russell said Chevalier also faced a charge of desertion from the Army in Washington.

KKK Leaders Claim Records Stolen

Birmingham, Ala., July 28 (AP).—Ku Klux Klan Leader William Hugh Morris told a grand jury today it is "physically impossible" to produce Klan records for the jury because they have been stolen.

The State argued that he should be returned to jail immediately until the secret files are produced. There was no indication when Judge George Lewis Bailes would rule on the case.

The jury wants the records of the white-robed order for use in an investigation of violence by hooded mobs here.

OLNEY AREA
Montgomery County, Md.

An excellent 200-acre farm, 600 ft. frontage, on ROUTE 97 (Olney-Brookville Pike). There are 50 acres in magnificent woodland, much virgin timber, through which the unimproved road winds. The balance of the land, Chester and Manor loam, is under cultivation or in pasture.

In addition to a tenant house and usual farm buildings, there is a delightful 100-year-old brick Colonial type residence with 8 beautifully proportioned rooms, and finished 3d floor of 3 rooms, and a full basement.

The 2 original stairs are continuous to the 3d floor and are charming. The residence has to be modernized but would justify a generous expenditure.

This property may be had for $225 an acre which is an attractive price for unimproved acreage in that area.

Self-Confidence and Success

I've often heard fathers say some such thing as this, "After all, we live in a competitive world. It's a good idea for kids to learn early what it means to fail. They'll learn to fight harder. There's too much softness in dealing with youngsters these days."

Such comments need examination. There is no question, indeed, but that we do live in a competitive world in many, many ways. And it is important for people who live in that world to learn how to get along. The real question is as to the nature of the best preparation for such competition.

Quiet self-confidence based on successful experiences in meeting problems would seem to be one of the most important aspects of ability to get along in play and work. The child or adult who is fearful and uncertain when he meets a new situation already has two strikes on him.

Such self-confidence as will stand the individual in good stead had its beginnings in the early years. A series of successes in the little things that confront every child is most important. Through them he develops a generally positive attitude that makes him say to himself, "I'm sure i can do this. It may be tough, but if I try I can do it."

Parents and teachers should make every effort to help children avoid failure as they face the day-by-day problems of the early years.

The Lyon's Den

By Leonard Lyons

NEW YORK—Margo and her husband, Eddie Albert of "Miss Liberty," were reminiscing about their friend, Ernst Lubitsch, and Margo reported this story told her by Lubitsch, about how he came to be a producer in Hollywood: Lubitsch started his career in show-business as an actor. He did so because he admired pretty actresses and suspected that they could be pinched, without protest, by an actor . . . When he started pinching the girls, the director ordered him to stop. "I knew the director was doing it" said Lubitsch, "so—I became a director." . . . He pinched the pretty actresses of Hollywood until a producer ordered him to stop. "And so," said Lubitsch, "I became a producer."

Witter Bynner has just completed a life of D. H. Lawrence, a writing project which took many years. He wrote it in Taos, where Lawrence spent much time . . . George Jean Nathan, the critic, was introduced to a man in the Stork Club. The critic liked the man and said: "I'm going to give you a gift"—and gave him a "List of Shows NOT to See."

A respected New Yorker, who for many years knew the family of Serge Rubinstein, the banker who was convicted of draft-dodging, received a phone call from the banker inviting him to a party for Andre Maurois. The New Yorker, who suspected a trace of dishonesty in the host, agreed to go because he was curious as to whether Maurois would be there . . . When he arrived he found Maurice Maeterlinck, Jules Romains, Lion Feuchtwanger, an internationally known newspaperwoman, a four-star general and two Hapsburgs. All of them were more important and more famous than Maurois . . . But Maurois was not there.

Publication of the Lasky-de Toledano book on the Hiss-Chambers controversy, which Duell, Sloan & Pearce is printing, has been postponed until after the Hiss retrial . . . Bronislaw Kaper, who resented having to be introduced to Norma Shearer so many times, because she never seemed to remember having met him before, finally found a way of making sure she'd never forget him. "Hello," he greeted Miss Shearer, and then pretended to fumble for her name. "Aren't you a sister of Douglas Shearer?"

During his concert at Lewisohn Stadium last week, Artur Rubinstein kept bending low over his piano—because he was afraid that the sudden gusts of wind would make his long hair look unkempt . . . The pianist, incidentally, visited a music shop in Westwood Village, where he lives, and listened to some Ravel recordings by a French orchestra. "The music's excellent, but the conductor is a poor one," said Rubinstein, who was a fried of Ravel. The salesgirl disagreed, and said: "No. The conductor is good."

The pianist smiled, and said, "I think I should know. My name is Artur Rubinstein" . . . "I should know, too," replied the salesgirl. "My name is Klemperer. I am Otto Klemperer's daughter."

Barbara Hutton's Illness Plea Gets Son Until Sept. 15

Dedham, Mass., July 28 (U.P.)—Blonde Barbara Hutton Troubetzkoy, much married Woolworth heiress, today won permission to keep her son in Italy for the rest of his summer vacation.

Under a custody agreement with her second husband, Count Kurt von Haugwitz-Reventlow, she was to have custody of 13-year-old Lance Reventlow only during the first half of his summer holidays. But she asked permission to keep him longer this year because of her illness.

Counsel for Princess Troubetzkoy and for the count agreed the boy could stay with his mother provided he is returned to the United States September 15.

Her present husband, Prince Igor Troubetzkoy, and her physician submitted statements to show she was a semi-invalid despite reports that she was appearing on famed Lido Beach in Venice in a form-fitting bathing suit.

TRY IT

PEEK INTO A PEEP-SHOW

"It's a circus" to design and make your own peep-show. It is not necessary to make a circus in your box; you can make a farm scene, a camping scene or a scene from your favorite play. Find a shoe box, and paste trees or background, cut from illustrations, around the inside of the box. You can find many colorful houses, animals, flowers and people just the right size to fit into your scene.

For added strength, mount these on cardboard cuttings and then add standards. Cut a hole, the size of a quarter, in the end of your box, and as you paste figures in position, your imagination will suggest new things to add.

When you have finished your scene paste a tissue or wax cover over the top of your box and the lighting effect will surprise you. This is truly a dream-land for as you ask, stories will enfold and your tiny people will turn into characters in story-book fashion.

What's the Verdict?

SKINFLINT'S ARENA

Q. Skinflint owned a small arena. One section of the seats was old and rickety. Smith wanted to promote a roller-skating derby and persuaded Skinflint to rent him the arena for $25 a night for three nights. Skinflint agreed, but made it a condition of the agreement that Skinflint was to have full control of the box office each night until he got his $25. The second night the rickety sections of seats collapsed, injuring the plaintiff, who sues Skinflint. Skinflint insists that since Smith had hired the hall and promoted the event, the suit should be against Smith, if against anybody. Correct?

A. While Smith might have been liable, had the plaintiff sued him, it does not mean Skinflint also isn't liable. One who invites others upon his premises is under a duty to see that the premises are reasonably free of danger, and if there is danger which the owner knew about or ought to have known about, he is liable if the invitee is injured. Here, the roller skating derby was a 3-night stand, which made it unreasonable to suppose it was intended that the promoter was to renovate the arena. Skinflint, by controlling the box office, showed he meant to get his money from the public rather than from Smith. Since a jury could reasonably find that he ought to have known about the unsafe condition of the seats, the plaintiff has a good suit against him. F. L. D.

Until the End

Some night when stars are brighter, dear . . . And we are not apart . . . I want to tell you all the thoughts . . . That linger in my heart . . . How much I love you and how much . . . I want you for my own . . . And why I am so miserable . . . When I must be alone . . . I long to gaze into your eyes . . . And whisper softly, so . . . That only you will hear my words . . . And no one else will know . . . Because I want you for myself . . . Beyond the longest day . . . Until the last full moon on earth . . . Has turned its face away . . . I want your loving heart, my dear . . . And all that it contains . . . Until the stars have disappeared . . . And nothing else remains.

Father of the Bride

Mr. Massoula's Circultaion Plan Fails, But His Men Keep Mr. Banks' Champagne Flowing Freely

This is the thirteenth of 14 installments of that popular saga of the forgotten man, "Father of the Bride." This condensed version of Edward Streeter's novel chronicles the story of Mr. Stanley Banks as he watches the rise of the greatest show on earth (his daughter's wedding) and the fall of his bank account.

By Edward Streeter

Illustrated by Gluyas Williams

MR. AND Mrs. Banks arrived at Maple Drive a few minutes behind the bridal party. During their absence Mr. Massoula had taken over completely in accordance with his promises. His Buckingham Caterers were darting about like Walt Disney gnomes.

In the living room Mr. Weisgold of Weisgold and Weisgold was perspiring freely and photographing the bridal party in various combinations. Those not engaged in being self-consciously photogenic stood about making wisecracks about those who were, between deep draughts of Mr. Banks' champagne, which had already begun to flow. A Buckingham representative approached with a tray full of glasses.

Mr. Banks took one. He felt like those men in the whisky ads who go through nerve-shattering experiences in jungles or on mountain precipices, then, their job well done, settle down calmly with friends in the last picture to a glass of their favorite grog. "Don't go away," he hissed to the waiter.

The Receiving Line

MR. BANKS never had a connected memory of the next 45 minutes. No one had told him whether or not he was to be part of the receiving line. For a moment he decided against it. Then it occurred to him that if he just stood in the middle of the living room he might be mistaken for the caterer. He slid quietly into place between his wife and Mrs. Dunstan as the first guest began to pump Mrs. Banks' arm.

They slid like eels through the melee

It became immediately apparent that one of his duties was to introduce the guests to Mrs. Dunstan.

Those who were now so eagerly pushing forward to shake his hand were, for the most part, lifelong friends. In spite of this he could not remember anyone's name. Occasionally he would recollect their first names, but he cauldn't very well say to Mrs. Dunstan, "This is Joe and Booboo."

Mrs. Banks felt herself jabbed from the rear with a thumb. "Sing out the last names," he whispered desperately.

Mrs. Banks glanced at him anxiously. She knew he had been going through a considerable strain, but she had hoped with all her being that he would hold together for another couple of hours. "Why, Jack and Nancy Hilliard," she cried gaily. "My dear, you look adorable. Yes. Wasn't it. I am so glad you thought so. And Grace Lippincott, I am so glad you could get here."

They Refuse to Circulate

SOMETHING was wrong, very wrong, with Mr. Massoula's "circulation." Theoretically the guests were supposed to slither off the end of the reception line, through a French door, and into the marquee where Mr. Massoula had set up his bar and buffet tables.

The first few couples to come off the line however, had chosen the French door in which to hold a long, eager conversation. Those who followed had merely rebounded from this obstacle back into the living room.

Mr. Massoula's gnomes were so efficient that no one needed to go to the bar anyway. They slid like eels through the melee, mysteriously carrying trays full of champagne glasses where no amateur could have transported an uncorked bottle.

It seemed to Mr. Banks that these busy little figures must be paid on a piece basis—so much per glass dispensed. Never had he seen men more devoted to their work. The moment a person tilted his glass they were at his elbow waiting eagerly with a fresh supply. It was true that he had told Mr. Massoula to keep things moving. He had merely been thinking of other weddings where he had stood around for hours with an empty glass. It was one thing to avoid that and another to hurl the stuff down people's throats every time they opened their mouths.

LATER he could remember a roar of voices—and people making faces at him—and making faces back at people—but it was a scene which would remain forever out of focus in his memory. Eventually he felt a tug at his sleeve. Kay and Buckley were standing behind him, Kay holding her crumpled train over her arm and grinning.

A bridesmaid peered around the corner . . . grinned sheepishly and disappeared

"Hi, Pops. We're going to get ready now. Don't you want to see me hurl my bridal bouquet?"

He followed them to the front hall while the wedding guests whooped noisily after. Kay and Buckley were already looking down from the landing.

Mr. Banks was astonished to discover an entirely new expression on Kay's face. Vanished the ethereal look she had worn as they started down the aisle. Now her ordinarily placid features radiated a self-confident, roguish gaiety that he had never seen before.

For 24 years Kay had been as satisfactory a daughter as any man could desire. His only complaint, if one could use so strong a word, was that she was too repressed, too shy—not a scared rabbit exactly, but lacking that bold grasp of the realities which he admired in women.

He had thought of her thus handicapped, leaving the cloisters and facing the world, in all the intimacy of married life and with a man whom she scarcely knew.

Yet here was Kay, who only a few days before had been telling him that she didn't have the nerve to go through with it, standing beside Buckley on the landing, looking over the faces below her with all the happy, relaxed assurance of a hunting dog which has just retrieved a bird.

The maid of honor was jockeying for position under the landing. Kay was waiting for her with the bridal bouquet poised. Small chance for the eager virgins clamoring with outstretched arms, their faces expressing in half-light what glowed so brightly and unashamed in Kay's.

There was a shrill yelping as the bridal bouquet came sailing over the rail and fell, with its usual precision, into the outstretched arms of the maid of honor. Then Kay and Buckley disappeared around the corner of the stairs followed by the bridal party.

Champagne Holds Out

THE crowd began to spread out again and Mr. Massoula's walking dispensaries, apparently refreshed by the pause, went into action with renewed enthusiasm. Mr. Banks was struck by the need for taking inventory and turned toward the marquee. There was a crowd of eager customers in front of the bar table. He shouldered his way in and tried to get the attention of one of the sweating men behind it.

A strange man next to Mr. Banks watched them with the tense concentration of a bird dog. "Lousy service," he said finally to Mr. Banks in what was obviously meant as a friendly opening.

"Terrible," agreed Mr. Banks.

"About on a par with the champagne," said the stranger.

"I thought the champagne was pretty good," said Mr. Banks defensively. "For American champagne of course."

"Bilge," said the genial stranger. "Sparkling bilge. I regard all champagne as bilge, but some comes from a lower part of the hold than others. This comes from just the keel." The young man took two dripping glasses and backed away.

Mr. Banks beckoned to one of the barmen.

"How is the champagne holding out?" he asked.

The barman looked at him coldly. "O.K., O.K.," he said. "Don't worry mister. You'll get plenty." Mr. Banks found himself blushing, then he remembered the old Chinese proverb and decided to relax and have a look at the garden.

A young man in a cutaway approached. "Mrs. Banks is looking for you, sir. She sounds as if she wants to see you right away."

Relieved to have some objective, Mr. Banks began to fight his way back to the house. Mrs. Banks pushed toward him through the crowded room. "Stanley Banks, where have you been? I'm almost crazy. I suppose you've been in that tent telling stories. Now come. Kay and Buckley will be coming down any minute."

Bride Outranks Admiral

Battle Plan Ready, Task Force of Three Calmly Awaits D-Day

Rear Admiral Albert G. Noble is chief of the Bureau of Ordnance for the Navy. His daughter, Nancy Louise, who studied at Miss Porter's in Connecticut an dhas studied voice for several years in New York, is tossing aside thoughts of a career to become the bride of Robert Schmied Myers September 9 at All Souls Church.

"WE'RE AT PARADE rest right now," says Rear Admiral Albert G. Noble in reference to the current lull in the prewedding arrangements for the marriage of his only child, Nancy Louise.

Accustomed to handling large-scale problems, the Admiral is not easily upset by the demands of a wedding. "We prepared a checkoff list of things to be done, and the dates by which they were to be done and then divided the responsibility three ways," he says.

ADMIRAL NOBLE

Does he think this will take care of all contingencies? "Now, you know perfectly well something will go wrong," he said reproachfully. "It wouldn't be right if something wasn't forgotten.

What does the Admiral hope most fervently won't be forgotten? If I knew that," he said with a twinkle, "I'd put it on the list."

Since the mother of the bride had met the young man while the father of the bride was at sea during the war, the "meeting" between the two men was eased by some advance knowledge of each other.

"There was no need to ask him his intentions. He made those clear," said the Admiral, remarking—perhaps just in passing—that his future son-in-law speaks five foreign languages. (He's now studying business administration at the University of Michigan.)

The early preliminaries were dispatched before Mrs. Noble and the bride-to-be left for Cape May in mid-July. The Admiral had made a few "ground rules" about the guest list since, "in the Navy we have a wide circle of friends and a wider circle of acquaintances" and the list had to be limited to the capacity of the place where the reception will be held. Current intentions are to have this customarily explosive event take place at the Gun Factory.

The Admiral, in charge of "supplying guns, ammunition, bombs and the equipment for their aim or direction" for the Navy, has been assigned the task of supplying the "potables" for the reception.

This assignment has already been checked off. "We're ahead of schedule on some things," he says.

The invitations have been addressed—"by friends of the bride who rallied 'round and did them all in one evening"—and are being mailed on a careful schedule by the father of the bride. "The ones to go overseas have already been mailed, the West Coast ones will go on August 1 and the East Coast ones on August 5," said the man who drew this assignment from the list. They are neatly stacked in a pair of blue and maroon boxes behind his desk.

Any hectic notes from the family to take care of something they'd forgotten? "No," said the Admiral pleasantly—and then being a man of candor, he added, "except for a request to check all the addresses on the invitations and be sure they are right."

A man of action (in both World Wars) and an officer of considerable authority, Admiral Noble is fully prepared to be assigned to a swab jockey role at the wedding.

"At the first wedding I attended, the bridegroom barely whispered 'I do' while the bride spoke right up." He knew then that "it's a womans show" and nothing in his experience since then has made him change his mind.

As a matter of fact, he recalls that his daughter took the whole matter out of her parents' hands right from the beginning by saying, "I know I'm too young to get married because I won't be 21 until December." Then, looking at her mother, "I know you were much older—you were 19."

What could a man—even an Admiral—say to that?

About Silver Flatware

I am about to buy a set of silver flatware and I would appreciate your advice on the appropriateness of having the odd pieces in a different pattern (or patterns) from the place pieces. If this is appropriate, is it true as to all the odd pieces? In considering selection, I have thought of omitting cream soup spoons and getting instead dessert spoons which could be used for both soup and dessert. However, the size of the dessert spoon seems to limit its use to certain kinds of dessert. I have also been uncertain about selecting from among regular tea spoons (about 5¾ inch), small tea spoons (about 4¾ inch) and coffee spoons (about 4⅛ inch) since I can't figure out which is likely to be most versatile. I have further uncertainty in figuring whether a potato spoon (about 8 inch) would be more useful for vegetable serving than would a vegetable spoon (about 9¾ inch) and what utility there is in a companion vegetable fork? Can you refer me to any book which discusses this subject in more detail than is convenient for you in your reply? J. J.

Most persons buying flat silver usually select the extra serving pieces in a pattern to match their place settings. During the war, of course, many firms discontinued making extra pieces and, in order to complete sets, it was often necessary to purchase the extra pieces, when they could be found, in patterns which did not match. Then, too, brides are sometimes given odd pieces of flat silver in patterns other than the one they have selected. The use of these with their own patterns is perfectly proper but they probably would have elected to have them match had they been given the choice.

Now for your question about dessert spoons: They do have a wider use than cream soup spoons but, even so, many persons choose the cream soups. Which you select is entirely your decision.

The regular or largest sized teaspoon would be the wisest choice since it can be used for all teaspoon uses. The smallest spoon is the demitasse spoon and would not be needed unless you have demitasse cups and serve coffee in that way when you entertain. I would suggest you buy two vegetable spoons the same size,—probably the larger size, for that size can be used nicely to serve potatoes and other vegetables as well. The vegetable fork can be used for serving some vegetables, by itself to serve cold meats, and with a large spoon when serving salads and vegetables which cannot be served nicely with one utensil.

There is an excellent article on "How to Buy Silver" in the May, 1949, issue of the American Home Magazine.

Did you know that at a launderette at 3505 Columbia Pike one may dye large or bulky articles such as shag rugs, etc., in their automatic machines? The tiny charge is a boon to housewives who formerly would have such things done professionally at considerable cost. Best of all is not having all the untidy rinsing to do by hand. A. R. S.

Thank you for this information. I understand this service is available at other launderettes over the city, too!

Preservability, Flavor Food Value Favor Tomato

By Lucia Brown

THEY used to call them "love apples," but that wasn't a pet name!

Tomatoes, thought our ancestors (not so far back, either), were deadly poison. It took a little experimenting to find out that they were not only fit, but good to eat. It took even more to discover that, fresh or canned, they were one of our best sources of vitamin C.

They're an ideal vegetable for summer canning because they're such valuable winter food. Besides, they're one of the easiest things to can because of their high acid content. You don't need a pressure cooker for the job. They'll keep nicely if you pack them away either hot or cold, then process the jars in a boiling water bath.

So don't just murmer wistfully "Some tomato!" when you admire a huge red globe of goodness at a roadside stand. Take it home and preserve it for posterity—your family, anyway—with the aid of a glass jar and a little work. It will look mighty fine on a bleak day next winter, too.

Here are the methods for hot and cold pack canning of tomatoes.

HOT PACK

Use only perfect, ripe tomatoes. To loosen skins, dip into boiling water for about ½ minute, then dip quickly into cold water. Cut out stem ends and peel tomatoes.

Quarter the peeled tomatoes. Heat them in a kettle until they reach a rolling boil. Stir often. Pack hot in glass jars to ½ inch of top. Add ½ teaspoon salt to pint, 1 teaspoon to quarts. Adjust jar lids. Process in boiling water bath (212 degrees Fahrenheit) for 10 minutes for either pint or quart jars.

Any big, clean vessel will do for a boiling water bath canner if it's deep enough to have an inch or two of water over the top of the jars and a little extra space for boiling. It should have a cover, too, and a rack to keep jars from touching bottom.

Before putting the filled jars into the canner, wipe rubber ring and jar rim clean. Then screw cap down firmly and turn it back ¼ inch. Do this job quickly, so jars will reach canner still piping hot. Water in canner should be boiling as jars are lowered in, each jar being set slightly apart from its neighbors. Water must boil briskly around, over and under each jar for the specified processing time.

After you remove jars from canner, complete seals immediately if closures are not of self-sealing type. Cool jars top side up, on thick cloth or paper. Give each jar room so air can get to all sides. Never set a hot jar on a cold surface or in a draft. Sudden cooling may break a jar. Do not cover jars while they are cooling.

Next day, test jars for leakage by holding them upside down. Then label and store in a cool, dry place.

COLD PACK

Peel perfect, ripe tomatoes as described under the "Hot Pack" instructions. Leave tomatoes whole or cut in halves or quarters. Pack in jars up to ½ inch of top, pressing gently to fill spaces. Add no water. Add ½ teaspoon salt to pints, 1 teaspoon to quarts.

Adjust lids by screwing tight, then turning lid back ¼ inch. Place jars in canner, having the water hot but not boiling. Add boiling water if needed to bring water an inch or two over tops of containers. Don't pour boiling water directly on glass jars. Put cover on canner.

Count time as soon as water comes to a rolling boil. Then boil gently and steadily for 35 minutes if tomatoes are in pint jars, 45 minutes for quart jars. As soon as you remove jars from canner, complete seals if closures are not self-sealing type. Cool and test as described under "Hot Pack."

USDA Photos

JOB NO. 1, when the home canner tackles a batch of tomatoes, is to inspect every one of them, selecting only the ripe, firm ones, free from spoiled spots

IF YOU'RE using the cold pack method, put raw peeled potatoes—whole, halved or quartered—into hot, clean jars, pressing down gently to fill spaces

WHEN the tomatoes are in the jars and the tops adjusted, place the jars in the water bath canner, which already contains some hot, but not boiling, water. Add extra boiling water if necessary to cover jar tops by one or two inches

Market Memo

Fresh, Frozen Fish Makes Food News Along With Plums

FISH and frozen fish and plums break into the news as the "Food Headliners" named for this week by the Department of Agriculture.

FISH are plentiful and will be a thrifty buy not only this weekend but throughout the month of August, says the department. Stocks of frozen fish in this country are about 10 per cent larger than this time last year. This means plenty of nice fillets of cod, haddock, flounder and rosefish at local meat counters.

Summer fishing weather is fine, so landings have been large. Featured on the Washington fish market are fresh croakers, weakfish, spot, fluke and soft and hard crabs.

PLUMS are having a good year. Above average crops are being harvested in California and Michigan and shipped this way. Seen on local fruit stands are the Santa Rosa plum, a large, purplish one; the Burbank, a Japanese-type plum which is a bright, cherry red, mottled yellow; the Gaviota, a very large, deep-red number, and others. Keep plums chilled and ready for delicious "out-of-hand" eating. Or cut them up in salads and fruit cup, and don't forget to make some fine jams and jellies. They can be frozen as well as canned to save them for next winter.

Out Today—a new novel by Marguerite Steen
TWILIGHT ON THE FLOODS
Working again on a broad, rich canvas, Marguerite Steen continues her powerful saga of the remarkable Flood family against the exciting, colorful background of Bristol, England, and the Gold Coast of Africa at the turn of the century. There are many colorful characters in this rich family chronicle, but it is particularly the story of Johnny Flood, great-grandson of Matt Flood, the slave trader. As always, Miss Steen is the master of her background, and the chapters on the Gold Coast convey, with unbelievable reality, the fascinations and dangers of that strange country; the cruelties and strange tribal customs of its natives. A worthy sequel to "The Sun Is My Undoing", it is an unforgettable story. $3.95

The Fur Flies in Britain As Fashion, Heat Meet

WHILE Britain swelters in a heat wave (not comparable to our own, we are certain), its fashion designers are entertaining buyers from abroad with a flurry of furs and woolens.

The fall fashion openings are on in full force in London, and dollar-hungry Britishers are hoping to tempt foreign pocketbooks with their best wools and worsteds, despite the "unusual weather."

Here are highlights from the collections, as viewed by Associated Press and United Press fashion reporters:

London (AP).—Norman Hartnell and Molyneux featured extremes between almost too much collar on top and hardly any top at all.

Molyneux's new features were huge collars that sloped down over narrow shoulders from the back of the head, and street-length evening dresses with cape-like overskirts that dragged over half the floor.

Molyneux's originals could be had for as little as 45 guineas ($189) or as much as 150 guineas (about $628), "depending on what you want."

Hartnell went in for detachable fur collars and capes. Molyneux showed swirling coats with checked wool linings made of the same material as the suit underneath.

Everything had pockets in it, some for putting things in and others puffed out at the hips to give women odd shapes. One of Molyneux's pockets was stuffed with a big bunch of artificial roses.

LONDON, (U.P.).—Charlie James, New York dress designer, startled the British fashion world with a handful of gowns—some of them over 10 years old—borrowed right off the backs of wealthy American and British customers.

The model voted the smartest of the collection was made in 1933.

James told the audience at his first postwar showing that he borrowed the creations from Movie Star Jennifer Jones, Mrs. William Paley, Mrs. Harrison Williams, and other vacationing in Britain, as well as from several London customers.

Mrs. Williams, who once held the title of the world's best-dressed woman, lent the revolutionary designer a magnificent green satin evening cape, lined with midnight blue and featuring a high petal collar.

A candy-striped satin-skirted gown, which James said Mrs. Douglas Fairbanks, jr., wore at a Buckingham Palace party, featured a brown satin bodice.

A black coat with a high collar, designed in 1933 for Mrs. St. John Hutchinson, was voted the smartest model of the collection. Mrs. Hutchinson also lent a black velvet gown, made in 1936.

"I am copying both designs for my clients in America this year," James, who is half-British, half-American, told surprised fashion critics.

On The Party Front

THE AMBASSADOR OF PERU AND SENORA DE BERCKEMEYER were at home yesterday to members of the Peruvian colony. Guests were received between 6 and 8 o'clock in gardens shaded by blooming magnolia trees. The occasion celebrated National Day of Peru. After singing the national anthem, guests proposed toasts in champagne.

Bolivian Air Aide Feted At Embassy Party

A SMALL cocktail party was given yesterday at the Bolivian Embassy in honor of the assistant air attache of the embassy, Maj. Hernan Justiniano, and his fiancee, Miss Maria Carmen Luz Quinones. Guests were received by the Ambassador and Senora de Martinez Vargas in the drawing room after 6 o'clock.

Major Justiniano and Miss Quinones will be married tomorrow at 3 o'clock at the Shrine of the Blessed Sacrament. Another member of the Bolivian Embassy who is to be married soon is the second secretary, Don Hugo Navajas M. His marriage to Miss Dorothy Bennett, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Bennett of Bayside, Long Island, will take place Monday afternoon at St. Matthew's Cathedral in New York.

Other news at the Bolivian Embassy is the arrival today of the Guillermo Gutierrez, Ambassador to the Organization of American States. Dr. Julio Alvarado, Secretary of Foreign Affairs for Bolivia, is leaving Washington tomorrow after a short visit.

Buffet Supper Honors Miss Marbury, Mr. Ryan

MISS PRISCILLA MARBURY and William Fitts Ryan, who are to be married tomorrow, were honored last evening at a buffet supper given by Mr. and Mrs. Richard C. Zantzinger of Upper Marlboro, Md. The supper was given at the Zantzinger residence, and later the guests were taken to the Chevy Chase Club for an hour or two of dancing on the terrace.

WHITE satin and silver brocade is the choice of Eleanor Steber for her appearance tonight as guest artist at the final concert of the National Symphony's Watergate season. Her gown, cut with dramatic neckline and full, flowing skirt, was designed for her by Paul Engel. With it she wears a matched jewel set of necklace and earrings

Mrs. Clark to Entertain Tonight; Gillettes Feted

MRS. Georgia Neese Clark, treasurer of the United States, will entertain at dinner this evening on the Shoreham Hotel Terrace.

Senator and Mrs. Guy Gillette were guests of honor at a dinner last evening on the Shoreham Terrace, given by members of Senator Gillette's office staff. Also guests were four members of the Senate subcommittee on agriculture of which Senator Gillette is chairman.

Mary Haworth's Mail

Warned by Doctor That She Is Becoming Psychoneurotic, Woman Couldn't Confide To Him That Her Marriage Is Breaking Up

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: After a check-up and a long discussion, my physician told me yesterday that I am on the way to being psychoneurotic; and although it was foolish of me, I couldn't tell him the real reason for my health complaints.

I find myself thinking in circles so much that I have continuous headaches, and I keep this all to myself. The truth is, my marriage is breaking up and there is nothing I can do about it. After 12 years of marriage my husband and I are almost complete strangers, and weeks go by during which we don't speak to each other.

The rift started about seven years ago, but I didn't realize it then. Two years ago it dawned on me, and as usual there was another woman; but after months of mental anguish, bitterness and hatred, I thought the whole thing was cleared up—with the help of good legal counsel.

HOWEVER, life has been hell on earth since then. My husband shows plainly that he no longer loves me, and I have glimpsed loathing in his eyes; but I am just as determined to keep the marriage intact as he is to break it off. At first my sole idea was to stay married for the children's sake, but lately I am obsessed simply with the thought that I'll never divorce him.

Even though I no longer love him, he does provide for us, and I am no longer a girl, I am 38. It would be difficult for me, and I don't relish the idea of returning to business to make my own living. And mother always taught me that marriage is until death. I clearly recall how difficult marriage was for her at times, but she would say it was just her cross to bear.

Is my attitude justified, or is there something wrong with me? What should I do? Is it likely that I may change and reach an adjustment that might make this strange life tolerable? The strain seems insupportable, so please answer soon; don't fail me. Just hearing your opinion may clear my head. V. G.

She's Handicapped by Emotional Jinx

DEAR V. G.: Your mother was a martyr-wife, the type who usually feels crucified by child bearing and child care also; and thus I wager that she caused her children keenly to feel that they were a "cross" she bore bravely, too.

Ergo, I daresay your emotional conditioning, subjective and social, was negative from the cradle up. Fighting maternal rejection, struggling for "recognition" in lieu of devotion, you became increasingly anxious, indignant and advantage-seeking. Love faculties shriveled and combative tendencies grew like iron weeds. Over the years you became a militant egotist, but your soul is desolate and afraid.

Owing to love-starvation in early life, your demands for consideration in later relationship would be insatiable and subtly self-pitying; and all homage received would be taken for granted by you as somewhat less than your due,—all because of that bottomless hunger never fed in childhood, which still cries for recompense.

MOREOVER, that thwarted-infant component in your personality still calls for revenge on the power who cheated; and thus, simultaneously with craving and seeking the total measure of love an infant would want, your instincts are alerted to "hate" because deprivation is anticipated. And that is the complex your husband has been up against, in trying to get along with you.

Now you "hate" your husband and don't know why, yet cling to him ferociously because you feel abjectly dependent upon his bounty and perfunctory protection. In large measure you have made him the scapegoat for neurotic animosity aimed at parents, ingrained in childhood; and if he "hates" you at this point, he is simply, passively mirroring your misdirected venom back

Thus fundamentally your problem is you—or your emotional legacy from mama; and it just happens that your husband was dragged into it by marriage. Your negativism induced the triangle, so forgive him that—and assign yourself to patient cure of your sick soul. For guidance, read Liebman's "Peace of Mind" (Simon & Schuster) and "Love and Marriage" (Harper & Brothers) by Dr. Alexander Magoun. M. H.

Ida Jean Doffs Her Cap To Dutiful Dieting Duo

By Ida Jean Kain

MY DIETITIAN'S cap is off to the gentlemen who gave up overeating in favor of less avoirdupois. Our Washington Post models have done me proud, one taking off 10 pounds, and the other 11.

By and large, men are not enthusiastic about a diet, but these boys have what it takes. They are so pleased with results, they plan to continue dodging fattening calories until the excess pounds are licked for good. More power to them!

Those first 10-11 pounds were knocked off in record time. For the long haul it is better to lose a bit more slowly, and it is important to check the daily menus for the protective nutrients. While reducing, stored fat is called on for part of the fuel needs. That's the way weight is lost. But excess fat can be called on for fuel only—there is no effective reserve of repair or regulating material stored up in the extra fat. And since the body does not run on fuel alone, but must have material to make good the daily wear and tear, certain foods must be included daily, not in reduced amounts but in normal amounts.

Here is the list which gives full protection and allows heavyweights to lose two pounds a week. It totals 1400 to 1500 calories a day—just the right number for the average Man-Sized Reducing Diet. Any overweight chap who is planning to continue reducing should follow this pattern.

And may the best man win!

Man-Sized Protective Food Pattern

Include Daily:	Calories
Fruits: 1 whole orange or ½ grapefruit or 2-3 glass of citrus juice—plus 2 other fruits	250
Eggs: 1 or 2	150
Milk or Cheese: 2 glasses whole milk or 1 glass and 1 ounce of cheese	320
Vegetables: 2 cooked, dark green leafy or yellow, plus another	100
Also serving of raw vegetables in salad	25
Bread: 100% wholegrain or enriched white, 3 regular size slices, or 1 serving of cereal and 1 to 2 slices of bread	225
Butter: 2 whole pats, each ¼-inch thick	100
Lean meat, fish or fowl: 4 to 6 ounces	250—300
Total calories	1420—1470

Austin M. Coleman (left) checks up on the statement of his pal, George Manning, that he rates two new notches in his belt as a result of Kain diet losses. Coleman has shed 11 pounds and Manning 10 since they went in for the losing game 10 days ago. George says the trousers he wears here were in the discard for two years because he couldn't get into them. Now they're even a little slack around his whittled waistline

After 10 Pleasant, Fruitful Diet Days, Post Men Prefer It

THERE is rejoicing today—but no ice cream and cake, pie or potatoes—for the two stout-hearted Circulation men who have been on the Kain diet.

Yesterday saw the end of the 10-day diet. Austin M. Coleman has parted with 11 pounds, and George Manning has waved goodby to 10. But besides changing their waistlines, they have changed their ways, both claim proudly.

"I'm off fattening foods for sure till I get down below 200 pounds," says Manning, who now tips the scales at 207. "I've gotten a calorie list from Miss Kain and I'm watching it like a hawk. Dieting is lots easier now than it was at first."

Coleman echoed his sentiments, but admitted he made a beeline for a beer the minute his 10 days were up.

"After all, I got to live!" he says. "How many calories in a glass of beer? Maybe I can give up breakfast or somep'n. Miss Kain wouldn't think much of that, though."

The pair, who work together in The Washington Post Circulating Department as well as on this dieting project, look forward to losing more slowly from here on out. Their initial reduction was fast but part of the credit should go to loss of stored water from the tissues, Miss Kain says. They groan a bit when they speak of continuing on short rations, think a little modification might be in order now.

"This diet really fills me up, though," says Coleman, "and I feel peppier, too. I'll give you a clew: I used to get sleepy a lot, want to take a nap in the afternoon, but I don't since I've been dieting."

Manning says he feels so fit that last Monday he gave a blood donation for a sick child in his neighborhood, with no ill effects. He says he has done everything Miss Kain prescribed except take exercise.

"I talked to her on the phone the other day and she said I should be exercising," he says. "I asked her if she consider it exercise to lift 80-pound bundles of newspapers out of the back of a car eyeryday. Or running up and down a ladder painting the house. Or pushing the lawn mower. She agreed my record made it clear I didn't need any more exercise!"

Money Gew-Gaws Fascinate Uncle Sam's Treasury Men Just as Much as Anybody

By Mary Van Rensselaer Thayer

THREE of the most fascinating rugs in the Capitol, repose in the respective offices of the Secretary of the Treasury; the Undersecretary of the Treasury, and on the wall of the Secret Service's contraband room. They're smallish, with white background, and the design, woven in deep blue, is a reasonably accurate copy of a United States dollar bill—the old, big ones, which were discontinued back in the late twenties.

These artistic nifties were whipped up somewhere in the Near East—the designer undoubtedly going to all sorts of trouble to make his creation accurate. On entry into this country they were confiscated because there's law that no one is allowed to imitate United States currency in any manner, no matter how far-fetched or ridiculous. However, confiscation cannot be made without an order from some United States attorney.

Down in the contraband room, the alert Secret Service laddies have cached a treasure trove of this type of oddity. Among them is an assortment of cigarette cases; some leather, others in silverish metal, stamped or etched with the facsimile of a dollar bill. Despite vigilance, a number of the metal cases are still loose around the country and, surprisingly enough, they turn up in country banks from time to time, the innocent owner actually convinced his case can be redeemed for a genuine dollar bill.

There are innumerable expensive silk scarves, printed most decoratively with a variety of greenbacks; handkerchiefs by the dozens, and—to our way of thinking most amusing of all—a huge faded-pink bath towel, handsomely be-fringed and embossed with an all-over design of a five-dollar bill! So remember, when touristing abroad, don't be overcome with nostalgia on finding some trifle copying our wonderful money.

Steer clear or it will be picked up at the customs!

And, one of the most interesting things in town, is the Treasury Department's permanent exhibition of counterfeit money—everyone can see it while relaxing in the Treasury's air-cooled building. It's amazing what counterfeiters are able to pass off on the public—and the exhibit might save you from being duped.

Congressman Finds It Takes "Pull" to Get Out of Tight Fix

The boys on the Hill insist that this happened to one of our better known Congressmen, but I can't get him to admit it.

They say that the lawmaker walked into the Capitol soaking wet with perspiration the other day. So, before going to the floor, he stopped in the lavatory, removed his shirt, sponged himself with cold water, dashed on some powder, and then put his shirt back on and went about his business.

But as the House session wore on, the Congressman began to feel uncomfortable. His shirt was stuck fast to his body.

Retiring to the lavatory again, he needed help to get the shirt off. It was glued on so tight that it had to be soaked off, and removed in strips.

Eventually, the irate Congressman found out what had caused his discomfiture. What he had assumed was talcum powder turned out to be a patented preparation guaranteed to make false teeth stay in place.

MAIL BAG

Dear Bill:

During the hot spell, my roommate and I and a fellow who lives next door have been sitting out in the front yard a good bit.

Naturally, we haven't been wearing overcoats. We girls usually wear play suits, and the man wears trousers, but no shirt.

We've been told by a policeman that we're "indecently exposed," and will either have to put on more clothes or go inside.

Our reply has been that we're better covered than folks at the beach—but it does no good, and we can't argue the point, because the policeman is also our landlord. J. L. R.

Dear Miss R:

Without mentioning any names, I've taken your problem to a police captain (in another precinct) and to Corporation Counsel Vernon West.

Both tell me that your policeman-landlord is wrong. The indecent exposure law does not prohibit the usual female playsuits nor the public appearance of men who are stripped to the waist.

As a matter of fact, both the police captain and Mr. West said the same thing: "If that's indecent exposure, I'm guilty too—because I sometimes work in my yard without a shirt."

I've purposely NOT discussed this with the captain of your precinct, because I'm sure you don't want to cause any trouble for the officer involved. If you'll politely inform him that he's wrong about the law (and perhaps show him this item) I'm sure he'll permit you to combat the heat in your own way. Bill.

VAGRANT THOUGHT

I'm beginning to suspect that our local weatherman is downright antisocial.

HOW'S THAT AGAIN?

A local taxicab company has notified the Dorchester House that a "scrapebook" belonging to one of the tenants has been found. Tom Beesley of that address is mildly amused by the spelling, and murmurs:

"Somebody's secret diary?"

Some 22,476 pints of human blood have been distributed in the past year in the area served by the Red Cross Washington Regional Blood Center, it was announced yesterday.

Of this, a total of 14,497 pints went to hospitals in the District, which has the only fixed blood collection center in the region—at 1730 E st. nw. The rest was distributed outside of the District.

The Washington Merry-Go-Round

Gen. Vaughan and Export Firm

By Drew Pearson

No one begrudges the President of the United States a White House jokester to relieve the strain of office, and Gen. "Happy" Harry Vaughan is not the first to hold such a job. FDR also had a military aide, Gen. "Pa" Watson, whose great asset was a sense of humor.

Pearson

However, "Pa" Watson didn't meddle in Army contracts and backstage lobbying. Pa did put in his oar to get George Marshall appointed Chief of Staff, but on the whole, he kept out of politics, and stuck to his chief function—relaxing the President of an evening.

General Vaughan, his successor, also has a contagious sense of humor, which brings healthy relaxation to his chief. But the public has little conception of how deeply Truman's military aide has dabbled in things that were no business of his, and how powerful his influence has been in obtaining favors for interesting people..

Take, for instance, export licenses. These permits to ship United States goods abroad have not the remotest connection with the Army. They concern the Commerce Department, not the President's military aide. Yet last year, General Vaughan intervened in these matters which he knew nothing about to help the Crescent Trading Co.

The Crescent Co. had been buying licenses. The Commerce Department started an investigation. However, General Vaughan, without investigating, wrote a letter on White House stationery, May 17, 1948, asking the Commerce Department to issue Crescent a license. Vaughan had never met the applicant, or the cosignee, but nevertheless vouched for the company's responsibility.

In other words, favors were asked for the company which had violated regulations, as against companies which respected the law—thanks to the jovial, undiscriminating White House aide.

Cigarette Deal

If Happy Harry would profit from one mistake, he might be forgiven. But he doesn't. The general also went to bat for Col. Hubert Fountleroy Julian, famed "Black Eagle" of Emperor Haile Selassie's Ethiopian air force, who had been connected with the Crescent Trading Co..

Colonel Julian wanted to go to Germany, and, without examining closely into the purpose of the trip, Vaughan sent him overseas to inspect the treatment of Negro troops in the European theater.

Vaughan even gave the Black Eagle such glowing credentials that when he reached Europe he was given a special military aide, had an hour's conference with General Clay, and toured the entire American zone of Germany as the guest of the U. S. Army. Fearing the power of the President's military aide, American generals literally bowed and scraped.

Then, suddenly, the real purpose of Colonel Julian's trip developed. He proposed taking over the Army's over-age cigarettes under a deal by which he would exchange one fresh carton for two old ones. The overage cartons he planned to sell to the Japanese at an estimated profit of five million dollars.

When General Clay heard about this, Hubert Fountleroy Julian was sent eagling on his way back to the U. S. A. and to the man who sent him—Harry Vaughan.

Merry-Go-Round

Quiet, middle-of-the-road Guy Gabrielson, GOP committeeman from New Jersey, looks like the new GOP chairman. Having spent 20 years in the Middle West, he is geographically o. k., and reasonably nonpartisan. In the clinches, he might lean toward Stassen . . . through a twist of fate, the Senate probe of the United States Lines' new luxury liner has been placed in the hands of North Carolina's Clyde Hoey. Senator Hoey is the brother-in-law of the late O. Max Gardner, attorney for the United States Lines. However, fair-minded Hoey will let the chips fall where they may . . . Washington rumor has it that the FBI is investigating two high Federal judges because of alleged communism. Here is all there is to the story: Two judges are being given a routine check—Judge Charles Wyzanski of Boston, who has been quoted as stating that if he were called before the Un-American Activities Committee he would tell them to "go to hell", and Judge Leon Yankwich of Los Angeles because of some speeches reported to have been too "liberal" for West Coast diehards. In Justice Department books, however, both judges rate high.

Extra Wide! Extra Low Priced! Cortley

Half-Yearly Sale Priced at $2 Pair

If it weren't our Half-Yearly these curtains would cost plenty more! They're Cortley mist-sheer rayon marquisettes! Tailored curtains you can use with or without draperies. Versatile curtains that are perfectly at home in living-room, dining-room, bedroom, sun-room, any room! Cortley made them with deep 5-in. bottom hems . . . with 1-inch side hems! He made them extra wide . . . 84-in. to the pair . . . so they hang in rich full folds! The Hecht Co. has them in 54, 63, 72, 81 and 90-in. lengths. Match up a set now and SAVE.
